An Old Stove.

The oldest stove probably in the United States, is the one which warms the hall of Virginia's capitol, Richmond. It was made in England and brought to Richmond in 1770, and warmed the House of Burgesses fir sixty years before it was removed to its present locacation, where it has been for thirty years. It has survived three British monarchs: has been contemporaneous with three monarchies, two republics and two Imperial governments of France. The great republic of America has been torn by internal strife, the breaches partly healed, and still the old stove, remains unmoved in the midst of all.

er, we are told a wooden ladie was found lying in the Spring. As there was not enough water in the Spring to render the making of salt from it an object of importance, Balthasar De Haert built a cabin and took up his abode in the wilderness, and, assisted by his brother, sunk a well about twenty feet, when they came to a rock. Then they commenced sinking a shaft into the rock, but his brother died, and Judge De Haert was left without much assistance and with limited means. He continued with a perseverance worthy of better success, progressing but slowly, until he induced a number of capitalists to engage in the work with him. About five years ago—January 1824—after sinking a shaft to the depth of 500 feet, it was supposed they had struck a fissure that would yield an abundance of salt water; but it proved a delusion. Judge De Haert soon after left the country, and the project was wholly abandoned."
