Rats and Mice-Vermin proof Walls.

Constant complaints are made through the press of the increase of rats and mice throughout the country. The only way to get rid of them effectually is to so construct our houses, barns and other building that they cannot hard them. To

If the wall of a house be of wood, before lathing and plastering inside, lay a coat of mortar and small stones or cement four or five inches thick, level with the floor of each story, between the studs and flush with them, or what, perhaps, would be better, fit in pieces of two-inch, hemlock plank. Neither rat nor mouse can gnaw through hemlock, for it immediately fills his mouth with sharp slivers on attempting it. Then if they ever get into the cellar or basement through a door to be built up hollow; the plaster inside can then be laid directly on to them, which leaves no harbor for vermin. If the walls be solid, as is generally the case, they must be furred out, lathed and plastered; but doing this, fill up the space between the mop board and wall with co-ment or strips of hemlock, and this will keep out mice. The space here, are houses are commonly built, is wide enough to admit rats. Rats and mice are destroying millions of property every year among us, and besides are very filthy and loathsome. But yet we continue to go on and make nearly every building we erect a perfect warren, shelter and home for them.—Am.

Treatment of Foals.

The foal shortly after birth is liable to constipation (stoppage), from the hard, black, glutinous feeces that naturally accumulate in the intestines during the lat-ter months of the fœtal state. Sometimes, when the mare's udder is swollen and full, the milk is drawn quite freely several days before the foal is born. The breeder ought not to forget that the first milk, or the beastings, as it is called, has an aperient property that appears indispensable to healthy action of the bowels. If constipation from that or any other cause succeeds, an aperient should be adminis tered without delay. The hard, waxy, physic, an injection, consisting of a pint of warm water, with an ounce of epsom salts dissolved in it may be admistered evrey four hours until relief is secured. Souring may arise from various causes; the milk of the dam may be too poor or too rich a nature, owing to sudden changes of diet; etc. In all such cases proper management of the mother is usually sufficient to correct the functional disorfoces watery, fettid, or clay-colored, not an hour should be lost. The proper treatment will consist in the administration of carminatives and mild astringents. The following is one of the most effectual preparations we know of. Take of carbonate of magnesia and prepared chalk, of each one cunce; oil of aniseed, half a drachm; tincture of onjum two drachms.

throughout the country. The only way to get rid of them effectually is to so construct our houses, barns and other buildings, that they cannot harbor them. To insure this, cellar bottoms should be cemented, and the walls also, unless they are solidly laid up with brick or stone and mortar. Every basement of a house where the sleepers are close to the ground should be filled up between these to a level with their tops with cement or grouting, and the boards or plank then nailed on, leaving not a hair's breadth, if possible, between the grouting and the illor. Neither rats nor mice can then get floor. Neither rats nor mice can then get ine simplicity and happiness, of which by under. We built a set of stables in this way fifteen years ago, and no vermin have ever found harbor under the floor nor have gnawed through it. Sometimes they have got in through a door or window, but by removing any thing standing the hard conditions of the sub-ject rendered it necessary to paint evil lurking in the midst. He does not, for instance, suppose Souter Johnny and Tam getting "unco happy," a case of wide application, but attributes all the bad to the argainst the walls, behind which they have found temporary shelter, so that a small terrier dog could pass around, he immediately caught them, and there was at once an end put to the nuisance.

Scotland has twice as many distilleries, but Ireland brews and drinks much more

For every 240 inhabitants in Scotland there is a house licensed to sell spirits for consumption on the premises, and the combined family wine and grocers' trade is very large besides. Scotland, indeed, has a pledge on her unenviable superiority, being in possession of an ebony whis-tle won at a bout in the time of James the Sixth, when, in the train of Anna of Denmark, there came to Scotland a Danor window, they cannot ascend to the upper stories and find shelter and breeding ordinate love of drink, being in short, an places between the lathing and siding immense walking hogshead. The whistle was, at last accounts, in the possession of a Scottish M. P.

Hot toddy is poured every night down the throats of noblemen, clergy, judges, laborers, ladies, and strangers, who soon fall into the habits of the country. It seems, however, not to be drank with desperation, but from hereditary habit and and strong liking. Nowhere but in Great Brittain, where the Times says, drinking is the crying scandal, will you find so many dry-looking mouths, so many flush-ed faces, so many lips washed and rung; and Scotland in this respect, is as bad a

Another bad thing. According to official statistics, the proportion of illegiti-mate births to the total number is, in Austria about 11 per cent., in Scotland, Denmark and Holland, about 10 per cent., in France and Prussia, about 7 per cent., in England, Norway and Sweeden less, and in Ireland, which preservs her chas tity while suffering every other degrada-tion, least of all.
