they have nothing home-like to gladden their hearts. The gardens they lay out, the furniture they buy, and the houses they build afford no home-love memories. After wearing out half a lifetime in perpetual change of habitation, with little gain and great loss, they see in their past career, nothing but failure. Habits wayward, the mind perplexed, their purpose cowed, their energies baffled and disappointed they surrender they settle down to late, and die among strangers. A good home, and the queen of the homestead, a good wife are assential to the happiness of every man, and nothing will as surely attached children to parents and to home vir-
