tracking them. Self-interest scals the hps of those who perpetrated, and those who profited by the frauds. Newspaper denunciations of individuals, without proof to back it, is contrary to our notions of justice and propriety, and would only afford a cheap triumph and apparent vindication in libel suits and prosecutions in which all the ma-chinery of what is here called "justice" would be strained and stretched to secure a political verdict. This risk we are in the daily habit of braving, when we see our way clear to at least the public exhibition of the truth. But without the means of exhibiting it, it would be a blunder to give t the combination of rogues, in and out of office, the opportunity for an easy triumph.
