

Wm. C. Orser

E. B. Hawley & Co., Publishers of THE MONTROSE DEMOCRAT, AND GENERAL JOB PRINTERS, Montrose, Susquehanna County, Pa.

MONTROSE DEMOCRAT

TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. Devoted to the Interests of our Town and County. FIFTY CTS. EXTRA IF NOT IN ADVANCE. VOLUME 31. MONTROSE, PA., WEDNESDAY, FEB. 4, 1874. NUMBER 5.

THE MONTROSE DEMOCRAT is Published Weekly except on Sundays, and contains all the Local and General News, Poetry, etc. Res. Abolition, Miscellaneous Reading, Correspondence, and a reliable class of advertisements.

Advertising Rates: One square, 10 cents per week; 10 squares, 1 dollar; 1 month, 3 dollars; 3 months, 8 dollars; 6 months, 15 dollars; 1 year, 30 dollars. Single copies, 5 cents.

Table with 2 columns: Destination and Rate. Includes entries for New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other cities.

Business Cards: J. R. & A. H. McCOLLUM, Attorneys at Law; D. W. SHARPE, Attorney at Law; W. F. SMITH, Attorney at Law; M. C. SUTTON, Auctioneer and Insurance Agent; A. M. R. Y., United States Auctioneer; J. SAUTER, Ambrosable Tailor; NEW TAILOR, Shop over J. R. DeWitt's; JOHN GROVES, Ambrosable Tailor; A. O. WARREN, Attorney at Law; W. A. CROSSON, Attorney at Law; W. H. WATSON, Attorney at Law; DR. W. W. SMITH, Physician; LAW OFFICE, J. H. & W. WATSON; ABEL TURRELL, Dealer in Drugs; SCOVILL & DEWITT, Attorneys at Law; DR. W. L. RICHARDSON, Physician; CHARLES N. STODDARD, Dealer in Drugs; LEWIS ENOLL, Shaving and Hair Dressing; DR. S. W. DAYTON, Physician; DR. D. A. LATHROP, Physician; CHASLEY MORRIS, THE HATTI BANNER; EXCHANGE HOTEL; LITTLE & BLAKESLEE, ATTORNEYS AT LAW; BILLINGSSTROUD, BILLINGSTROUD; R. T. & E. H. CASE, SIGNERS; VALLEY HOUSE, DEALER IN DRUGS; F. CHURCHILL, Justice of the Peace.

POETRY. OVER THE DAN, Yes, life is a swift-running river, But it might be a swift-running tide, That glides so smoothly at starting, That one can't see it till it's gone.

MISCELLANEOUS READING. MRS. CRAWFORD'S JEALOUSY. "What could it have been?" said Mrs. Crawford to herself, as she walked softly to and fro in the little parlor.

and her eyes red with tears and agitation, saw the interior of the desk. On one side of a long ledger, a blotter, a ruler, and some stamps, and on the other a pile of reception bills, and two unpaid ones. In the pigeon-holes letters yellow with age, tied up with comb and ribbon, and in the very middle a book, one he had been reading the night before, from the edges of which protruded something pink. Mrs. Crawford pounced on this with a low cry. It was a little envelope; from it she tore a note. This was what she read: "MY DEAREST WILLIAM—I've longed so to see you all day. But here you come to-night. With a kiss, yours always."

Deepwater. "Nancy," said Titus on their way home, "Prudence Deepwater beats all creation for cooking, don't she? I'd like to see a woman with a hand at it. I wonder where she got them fresh strawberries?" "She preserved them herself," answered Nancy. "Oh, get out! There wasn't preserved—they were fresh as new picked."

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE. In the O'Mara Murder Trial, WITH THE EXCEPTIONS FILED. GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY.—It is scarcely necessary to inform you that this case is one of transcendent importance. Important alike to the public and to the prisoners. The case has occupied a long time, and has been tried by the counsel on both sides with marked ability.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE. GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY.—It is scarcely necessary to inform you that this case is one of transcendent importance. Important alike to the public and to the prisoners. The case has occupied a long time, and has been tried by the counsel on both sides with marked ability.

the large blue ink wound upon the face) as being infiltrated or full of blood. The wound upon the arm, that is at the shoulder and elbow had no evidence of infiltration. This absence of blood, if the wounds were made in life, by the physicians, could only be accounted for by the death being so sudden as to prevent any reaction. In such cases no bleeding might occur. But they declare that the Mary O'Mara has one-half of the blood of her body. They all give the opinion that the wounds made upon the face and head (except the nine inch wound) were made in life, and that the wounds upon the arm were made upon the body after death.

and her eyes red with tears and agitation, saw the interior of the desk. On one side of a long ledger, a blotter, a ruler, and some stamps, and on the other a pile of reception bills, and two unpaid ones. In the pigeon-holes letters yellow with age, tied up with comb and ribbon, and in the very middle a book, one he had been reading the night before, from the edges of which protruded something pink. Mrs. Crawford pounced on this with a low cry. It was a little envelope; from it she tore a note. This was what she read: "MY DEAREST WILLIAM—I've longed so to see you all day. But here you come to-night. With a kiss, yours always."

Deepwater. "Nancy," said Titus on their way home, "Prudence Deepwater beats all creation for cooking, don't she? I'd like to see a woman with a hand at it. I wonder where she got them fresh strawberries?" "She preserved them herself," answered Nancy. "Oh, get out! There wasn't preserved—they were fresh as new picked."

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE. In the O'Mara Murder Trial, WITH THE EXCEPTIONS FILED. GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY.—It is scarcely necessary to inform you that this case is one of transcendent importance. Important alike to the public and to the prisoners. The case has occupied a long time, and has been tried by the counsel on both sides with marked ability.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE. GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY.—It is scarcely necessary to inform you that this case is one of transcendent importance. Important alike to the public and to the prisoners. The case has occupied a long time, and has been tried by the counsel on both sides with marked ability.

the large blue ink wound upon the face) as being infiltrated or full of blood. The wound upon the arm, that is at the shoulder and elbow had no evidence of infiltration. This absence of blood, if the wounds were made in life, by the physicians, could only be accounted for by the death being so sudden as to prevent any reaction. In such cases no bleeding might occur. But they declare that the Mary O'Mara has one-half of the blood of her body. They all give the opinion that the wounds made upon the face and head (except the nine inch wound) were made in life, and that the wounds upon the arm were made upon the body after death.

the large blue ink wound upon the face) as being infiltrated or full of blood. The wound upon the arm, that is at the shoulder and elbow had no evidence of infiltration. This absence of blood, if the wounds were made in life, by the physicians, could only be accounted for by the death being so sudden as to prevent any reaction. In such cases no bleeding might occur. But they declare that the Mary O'Mara has one-half of the blood of her body. They all give the opinion that the wounds made upon the face and head (except the nine inch wound) were made in life, and that the wounds upon the arm were made upon the body after death.

and her eyes red with tears and agitation, saw the interior of the desk. On one side of a long ledger, a blotter, a ruler, and some stamps, and on the other a pile of reception bills, and two unpaid ones. In the pigeon-holes letters yellow with age, tied up with comb and ribbon, and in the very middle a book, one he had been reading the night before, from the edges of which protruded something pink. Mrs. Crawford pounced on this with a low cry. It was a little envelope; from it she tore a note. This was what she read: "MY DEAREST WILLIAM—I've longed so to see you all day. But here you come to-night. With a kiss, yours always."

Deepwater. "Nancy," said Titus on their way home, "Prudence Deepwater beats all creation for cooking, don't she? I'd like to see a woman with a hand at it. I wonder where she got them fresh strawberries?" "She preserved them herself," answered Nancy. "Oh, get out! There wasn't preserved—they were fresh as new picked."

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE. In the O'Mara Murder Trial, WITH THE EXCEPTIONS FILED. GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY.—It is scarcely necessary to inform you that this case is one of transcendent importance. Important alike to the public and to the prisoners. The case has occupied a long time, and has been tried by the counsel on both sides with marked ability.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE. GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY.—It is scarcely necessary to inform you that this case is one of transcendent importance. Important alike to the public and to the prisoners. The case has occupied a long time, and has been tried by the counsel on both sides with marked ability.

the large blue ink wound upon the face) as being infiltrated or full of blood. The wound upon the arm, that is at the shoulder and elbow had no evidence of infiltration. This absence of blood, if the wounds were made in life, by the physicians, could only be accounted for by the death being so sudden as to prevent any reaction. In such cases no bleeding might occur. But they declare that the Mary O'Mara has one-half of the blood of her body. They all give the opinion that the wounds made upon the face and head (except the nine inch wound) were made in life, and that the wounds upon the arm were made upon the body after death.

the large blue ink wound upon the face) as being infiltrated or full of blood. The wound upon the arm, that is at the shoulder and elbow had no evidence of infiltration. This absence of blood, if the wounds were made in life, by the physicians, could only be accounted for by the death being so sudden as to prevent any reaction. In such cases no bleeding might occur. But they declare that the Mary O'Mara has one-half of the blood of her body. They all give the opinion that the wounds made upon the face and head (except the nine inch wound) were made in life, and that the wounds upon the arm were made upon the body after death.

and her eyes red with tears and agitation, saw the interior of the desk. On one side of a long ledger, a blotter, a ruler, and some stamps, and on the other a pile of reception bills, and two unpaid ones. In the pigeon-holes letters yellow with age, tied up with comb and ribbon, and in the very middle a book, one he had been reading the night before, from the edges of which protruded something pink. Mrs. Crawford pounced on this with a low cry. It was a little envelope; from it she tore a note. This was what she read: "MY DEAREST WILLIAM—I've longed so to see you all day. But here you come to-night. With a kiss, yours always."

Deepwater. "Nancy," said Titus on their way home, "Prudence Deepwater beats all creation for cooking, don't she? I'd like to see a woman with a hand at it. I wonder where she got them fresh strawberries?" "She preserved them herself," answered Nancy. "Oh, get out! There wasn't preserved—they were fresh as new picked."

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE. In the O'Mara Murder Trial, WITH THE EXCEPTIONS FILED. GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY.—It is scarcely necessary to inform you that this case is one of transcendent importance. Important alike to the public and to the prisoners. The case has occupied a long time, and has been tried by the counsel on both sides with marked ability.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE. GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY.—It is scarcely necessary to inform you that this case is one of transcendent importance. Important alike to the public and to the prisoners. The case has occupied a long time, and has been tried by the counsel on both sides with marked ability.

the large blue ink wound upon the face) as being infiltrated or full of blood. The wound upon the arm, that is at the shoulder and elbow had no evidence of infiltration. This absence of blood, if the wounds were made in life, by the physicians, could only be accounted for by the death being so sudden as to prevent any reaction. In such cases no bleeding might occur. But they declare that the Mary O'Mara has one-half of the blood of her body. They all give the opinion that the wounds made upon the face and head (except the nine inch wound) were made in life, and that the wounds upon the arm were made upon the body after death.

the large blue ink wound upon the face) as being infiltrated or full of blood. The wound upon the arm, that is at the shoulder and elbow had no evidence of infiltration. This absence of blood, if the wounds were made in life, by the physicians, could only be accounted for by the death being so sudden as to prevent any reaction. In such cases no bleeding might occur. But they declare that the Mary O'Mara has one-half of the blood of her body. They all give the opinion that the wounds made upon the face and head (except the nine inch wound) were made in life, and that the wounds upon the arm were made upon the body after death.

and her eyes red with tears and agitation, saw the interior of the desk. On one side of a long ledger, a blotter, a ruler, and some stamps, and on the other a pile of reception bills, and two unpaid ones. In the pigeon-holes letters yellow with age, tied up with comb and ribbon, and in the very middle a book, one he had been reading the night before, from the edges of which protruded something pink. Mrs. Crawford pounced on this with a low cry. It was a little envelope; from it she tore a note. This was what she read: "MY DEAREST WILLIAM—I've longed so to see you all day. But here you come to-night. With a kiss, yours always."

Deepwater. "Nancy," said Titus on their way home, "Prudence Deepwater beats all creation for cooking, don't she? I'd like to see a woman with a hand at it. I wonder where she got them fresh strawberries?" "She preserved them herself," answered Nancy. "Oh, get out! There wasn't preserved—they were fresh as new picked."

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE. In the O'Mara Murder Trial, WITH THE EXCEPTIONS FILED. GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY.—It is scarcely necessary to inform you that this case is one of transcendent importance. Important alike to the public and to the prisoners. The case has occupied a long time, and has been tried by the counsel on both sides with marked ability.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE. GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY.—It is scarcely necessary to inform you that this case is one of transcendent importance. Important alike to the public and to the prisoners. The case has occupied a long time, and has been tried by the counsel on both sides with marked ability.

the large blue ink wound upon the face) as being infiltrated or full of blood. The wound upon the arm, that is at the shoulder and elbow had no evidence of infiltration. This absence of blood, if the wounds were made in life, by the physicians, could only be accounted for by the death being so sudden as to prevent any reaction. In such cases no bleeding might occur. But they declare that the Mary O'Mara has one-half of the blood of her body. They all give the opinion that the wounds made upon the face and head (except the nine inch wound) were made in life, and that the wounds upon the arm were made upon the body after death.

the large blue ink wound upon the face) as being infiltrated or full of blood. The wound upon the arm, that is at the shoulder and elbow had no evidence of infiltration. This absence of blood, if the wounds were made in life, by the physicians, could only be accounted for by the death being so sudden as to prevent any reaction. In such cases no bleeding might occur. But they declare that the Mary O'Mara has one-half of the blood of her body. They all give the opinion that the wounds made upon the face and head (except the nine inch wound) were made in life, and that the wounds upon the arm were made upon the body after death.

and her eyes red with tears and agitation, saw the interior of the desk. On one side of a long ledger, a blotter, a ruler, and some stamps, and on the other a pile of reception bills, and two unpaid ones. In the pigeon-holes letters yellow with age, tied up with comb and ribbon, and in the very middle a book, one he had been reading the night before, from the edges of which protruded something pink. Mrs. Crawford pounced on this with a low cry. It was a little envelope; from it she tore a note. This was what she read: "MY DEAREST WILLIAM—I've longed so to see you all day. But here you come to-night. With a kiss, yours always."

Deepwater. "Nancy," said Titus on their way home, "Prudence Deepwater beats all creation for cooking, don't she? I'd like to see a woman with a hand at it. I wonder where she got them fresh strawberries?" "She preserved them herself," answered Nancy. "Oh, get out! There wasn't preserved—they were fresh as new picked."

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE. In the O'Mara Murder Trial, WITH THE EXCEPTIONS FILED. GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY.—It is scarcely necessary to inform you that this case is one of transcendent importance. Important alike to the public and to the prisoners. The case has occupied a long time, and has been tried by the counsel on both sides with marked ability.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE. GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY.—It is scarcely necessary to inform you that this case is one of transcendent importance. Important alike to the public and to the prisoners. The case has occupied a long time, and has been tried by the counsel on both sides with marked ability.

the large blue ink wound upon the face) as being infiltrated or full of blood. The wound upon the arm, that is at the shoulder and elbow had no evidence of infiltration. This absence of blood, if the wounds were made in life, by the physicians, could only be accounted for by the death being so sudden as to prevent any reaction. In such cases no bleeding might occur. But they declare that the Mary O'Mara has one-half of the blood of her body. They all give the opinion that the wounds made upon the face and head (except the nine inch wound) were made in life, and that the wounds upon the arm were made upon the body after death.

the large blue ink wound upon the face) as being infiltrated or full of blood. The wound upon the arm, that is at the shoulder and elbow had no evidence of infiltration. This absence of blood, if the wounds were made in life, by the physicians, could only be accounted for by the death being so sudden as to prevent any reaction. In such cases no bleeding might occur. But they declare that the Mary O'Mara has one-half of the blood of her body. They all give the opinion that the wounds made upon the face and head (except the nine inch wound) were made in life, and that the wounds upon the arm were made upon the body after death.