that on the part of the reporters in M. Leslie, at Susquehanna Depot. Detendant plead guilty—excuse drunkenness. Sent to ditions, either they were so horrified by the scene that they could not have intelligent cognizance of what transpired or else they were looking for the best interests of their employers and writing up an imaginative scene found ed upon some facts as each one's ability capaci rates him for the task, to satisfy the morbid appetite of their readers for such sensational eading. We are inclined to believe that the latter was the roling passion from the fact that one pictures out the poor, miserable victims as meeting their fate like beroes and martyrs, and rom his glowing description almost exciting feeling of emulation of their coolness and firmness, while another shows them as quaking, shivering, drivelling cowards. One pictures them as dying peacefully and almost without a struggle, while anothers represent that they eked out their miserable existance in writhing agonics. We have had a long settled belief that these kind of sensational descriptions, in the newspapers, of such scenes, let them be true or talse, are a bane to society, and especially to the youth of our land, who become so familiarized with the details of such swful exhibitions as to blunt their finer sensibilities and increase the inclination to crime by inciting, in some one, the desire almost, to be such a hero on the scaffold, and also confuting the only argument in favor of capital punishment, the deterring from crime, and protection of society by the fcar of the gallows. At the risk of not being onounced a live editor, we have determined not to spread before our readers any detailed sensational description of this scene, either of our own or of any one else.

Daniel O'Mara and Patrick Irving died to pay uenched. The employment of steam by the the penalties of the law, in such case made Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company in ex- and provided. How they acted or how they tinguishing the Empire mine fire has proved a looked, is of no consequence to us or them success, which must be of incalculable value neither is it any key to how they felt. The op eration of their minds is only known to them and their Creator. They are dead. Here let The story is one full of interest and value as the book be closed in the hope that the lesson

Father Slattery was with the prisoners, both even in the midst of the mining regions. The before and at the execution, and administered general thought seems to be of a vein of coal such consolation, as the Church provides burning itselt out in certain restricted limits or Daniel O'Marn,a short time before his execution made a confession of his guilt, declaring ne one to be implicated but himself and Irving of conquering it, involving not merely heavy to the public in pamphlet form.
