

in that tiniest subere-a drop of water. As cited by F. W. Fellowcs, in the American Naturalist, says M. Davaine : "Nothing is more curious than, to see, under the microscope, these little mollusks travel in a drop of water in vast numbers, mutually avoiding one another, crossing each other's track in every direction with a wonderful rapidity, never touching and never neeting."., The parent oyster has indeed, a prodigious family to turn out upon the world. But when this time does come, though winter be near, her actions are summary, and the wee bairns are every one ordered from home. They are suit forth, or ejected from the shell. Filled with water, the valves are suddenly snapped together. Every snap emits a small, whitish cloud. Though a little of the milky fluid be in it, this whitish cloud is composed chiefly of the tiny fry, for individually they are almost invisible. Indeed, who shall count the oyster's off-spring? Science, by her methods, her made the computation, and so she gives us the astounding issurance that a single oyster during one spawning season emits 2,000,000 embryos ?
