LA PAUVRE PETITE.

The lamps glow within, the storm raves without.

I sat at mine ease in the softened light,

And think of Geneva; she seemed so devout,

I wonder if ever she shade of a doubt,

Crossed the mind of her lord ere that night.

I look at the bubbles that dance and swim

On the amber wine, like an elfin beam,

And I dream of the past, while my eyes grow dim.

As I anxiously kiss with my lips the rim

Of the antique glass in my hand.

Selected Story.

"LITTLE JOE."

Tom Wise, a great big, handsome fellow, was standing at the corner talking to a friend.

He held a cigar to his mouth with his left hand, and with his right hand, had just struck a match against the lamp-post, when at—rather under—his elbow a voice exclaimed cheerily, "Busted again, Mas' Tom!"

Tom threw a glance over his shoulder, and there stood "Little Joe," a small mixed negro, about fifteen years old, with crutches under his arms, and feet twisted all out of shape, his toes barely touching the ground as he hobbled along.

There he turned it upside down, spread a newspaper over the top, and proceeded to display his wares.

A pyramid of apples stood in one corner; a small stack of peppermint candy was in the other; a tin glass of peanuts was in the third, and was surrounded by a lemon that had seen life, and was more than yellow. But the crowning glory was the centre-piece—an unhappy-looking piece of vintage pulp and thin physique, now hunched up on its crutches, and back on its crutches, turning his head from side to side as he surveyed the effect, took up a locust branch he had brought with him to brush away the flies, and leaning against the ground with "calm dignity" awaited coming terms.

His glance fell on the figure of a negro boy, who gazed with longing eyes upon the delicacies of his table, and it was with a strange feeling of kinship that the little fellow continued to regard the new comer for too had been branded by misfortune. He appeared about Joe's age, and was taller but that his legs had been amputated nearly up to the knee, and as he stood on the pitted stumps, supported by a short cane in one hand, his head was hardly as high as the iron railing. He had none of Joe's brightness, but looked ragged and "dirty" and hungry, and evidently had no Mas' Tom's luck.

His sister had been holding her head very high indeed.

The next morning Joe came by the office, and did folks say "bout 'bout 'breas' pin, Mas' Tom?"

THE LAST GLASS.

BY WM. COLLINS.

"No, thank you, not any to-night, boys, for me."

I have drank my last glass, I have had my last spree;

You may laugh in my face, you may sneer at my fall;

But I've taken the pledge and I'll keep it until I am laid in the church-yard and sleep 'neath the grass.

And your sneers cannot move me—I've drank my last glass.

"Just look at my face, I am thirty to-day, it is wrinkled and hollow, my hair has turned gray."

And the light of my eye that once brilliantly shone,

And the bloom of my cheek, both are vanished and gone;
