A Moravian missionary has recently written a book describing the habits of the people in the Thibetan province of Lubut-a valley ten thousand feet above the sea, surrounded by the loftiest mountains in the world. The doctrine of the transmigration of souls has obtained a firm hold upon the belief of the inhabitants of that region, and the aim of life death, which is only a change of the soul bered about a hundred. Some of them increased patronage of and friendship for from one house to another. Polygamy is practiced there, but takes the form of a multiplicity of husbands instead of wives, one wife being considered enough in a honsehold of brethern. It is a great pity that a few or the Buddhist prices of this remote region in Central Asia can not be exchanged for an equal number of Brigham Young's elders. Such antipathie treatment might in time establish a mean of decency.
