Alderney Cows.

Alderney is well known for the breed of good cows which bears its name.—These are so called probably because the first ones exported were from that island, although now very few that are sold as Alderney cows are directly from there.—Those of that breed actualy exported from these islands are generally from Jersey, where the cattle are much the same as those of Alderney, small, with tapering heads, and of a delicate fawn color. The Guernsey cow is esteemed by some even more highly than the Alderney; it is rather larger, and more of a red, brindled in color. The cows are milked three times daily, and the milk is churned without skiming; one pound of butter is by no means an uncommon yield for a good cow. The cow cabbage is made to reach a size so large that the leaves are used to wrap the butter in for market; while the stalks are varnished and armed with ferrule and extensively used at St. Helier's for canes. The cows are very carefully coddled. The grass they feed on is highly enriched by the vraic, a species of seaweed gathered from the reefs at low tide. There are two vraic harvests appointed by the government, one in the spring, the other in August, although it is gathered at other times in small quantities. All hands turn out in the season with boats and carts, frequently at night, and it is a very lively, picturesque occupation, though often attended with risk and loss of life from the overloading of boats or sudden rise of the tide. The cows are always tethered when feeding; they eat less in this way, really giving more milk than if glutted with food, and while they are cropping the grass on one side of the field, it has time to spring up on the other. When they have done eating, they are at once removed from the sun into the shade. The breed is preserved from intermixture with other breeds by strong arbitrary laws very strongly enforced.—No cattle are allowed to enter the islands except for slaughter within a certain number of days, with the exception of oxen for draught.—Harpers Magazine.

Storing Hay in Tight Barns.

Nearly thirty years ago a man of progressive ideas said to us that grass but partially cured could be stored in large bulk in tight barns with perfect safety, and come out looking better and less musty than if dried and stored in ventilated barns. We regarded it as a visionary idea to which he had given a kindly reception on account of its novelty, but which would result in loss if put in practice.—It was the custom then to side up barns with green boards, so that they would shrink in seasoning, leaving wide cracks to admit the air for drying out the hay. An important principle was here overlooked. Fermentation, like combustion, is caused by the union of oxygen with carbon, and can no more proceed if air is excluded, than fire can burn under like conditions. Many farmers have learned that manure will not ferment rapidly when it is trodden down so as to nearly exclude the air, and that it seldom fire-fangs when thrown where the cattle can trample it under foot.

The class which above all others, has made grass and hay a special study is dairymen. They have arcertained by experiments, directed by science, that hay will keep better in clap boarded or battened barns than in open barns or stacks. That the heating will be so moderate as to only dry out the hay without moulding.

If it is a fact that hay can be safely put into a large mow, in a tight barn, less cured than is necessary if stacked or stored upon scaffolds, or in open barns, it is a very important fact for farmers, as it will enable them to gather their hay crop with much less exposure to the vicissitudes of the weather, for even where hay is in cock, the exterior surface is injured by contact with dew or rain.

The Sugar Beet.

It is a curious fact that in the newly settled portions of our country few roots are grown for stock feeding, while in the older portion and in Europe they are almost universally grown. We are, of course, aware of the reasons given for not growing them on new farms, but we really think these reasons are not sound, and believe that every farmer who keeps cows oxen, or horses and sheep would find it very profitable to raise some roots to feed along through winter and spring. Animals confined to yards and stables and dry food, relish green, succulent food.

In Europe the sugar beet appears to be displacing the turnip for cattle food. In the London Agricultural Gazette a writer says that many a Continental farmer considers a crop of sugar beets far better and more profitable than any other root crop. It furnishes more nutritious substances, does not exhaust the land, may be grown on fallow, and by good cultivation and judicious manuring yields as much as any other root. The white Silesian beet is not inclined to get hollow in the top, does not suffer so much from the frost and keeps better in stocks.

The white Silesian beet is best, being the richest in sugar, and grows mostly under ground. The seed is sown in April or May, sixteen to eighteen inches apart. As soon as the plants appear a careful hoeing must be given, afterward they are thinned out, and then the cultivator is kept going as often as necessary to keep the ground clear and mellow. Rotten farm-yard manure is used if it can be had if not guano, superphosphates and potash salts. Stimulating manures are not good for sugar beets.

How to Keep Meat Fresh.

The following method will keep meat fresh for weeks even in the warmest weather: As soon as the animal heat is out of the meat, slice it up, ready for cooking. Prepare a large jar by scalding well with hot salt and water. Mix salt and pulverized saltpeter in the proportion of one tablespoonful saltpeter to one teacupful of salt. Cover the bottom of the jar with a sprinkle of salt and pepper.—Put down a layer of meat, sprinkle with salt and pepper the same as if going to the table, and continue in this manner until the jar is full. Fold a cloth or towel and wet in strong salt and water, in which a little of the saltpeter dissolved.—Press the cloth closely over the meat and set in a cool place. Be sure and press the cloth on tightly as each layer is removed, and your meat will keep for months. It is a good plan to let the meat lie over night, after it is sliced, before packing. Then drain off the blood that oozes from it. It will be necessary to change the cloth occasionally, or take it off and wash it—first in cold water—then scald in salt and water as at first.

A Tablespoonful of black pepper put in the first water in which gray and buff linens are washed, will keep them from spotting. It will also keep the colors of black or colored cambrics or muslins from running, and does not harden the water. A little gum of arabic imparts a gloss to ordinary starch.

Humorous.

Press-Room Bill.

Bill was the cuss;
Slept all night on a pile of stock—
Hard as a rock,
But what'd he care! He'd no friends
That would make a muss
If he slept in the streets;
So he sends
For a pot of beer and a bite to eat
In the press-room,
Where with jes' room,
To stretch out straight,
He'd wait
Till the boys got round in the upper regions,
And by legions
He'd feed the sheets to the hungry maws
And iron jaws
Of the press;
You can guess
How he loved the machine and his work.
He shirk?
When he gave his word
That settled it sure. Whatever it was
You could be poz
That he'd do as he said, if it took a leg.
Not a peg
Would he move, whatever he saw or heard,
To break a promise
Was farthest from his
Thoughts of what was the duty of man,
And where the law of right began,
One night the buss
(Member of Congress now, they say,)
Came down stairs,
Putting on airs,
(His usual way.)
Pretty soon he came across
Bill, who was putting the forms in place;
"Bill," said he,
"I want a copy brought up to me
At four o'clock in any case;
For I leave at five
By an early train,
So look alive;
Or"—here his language became profane—
"You'll do it, Bill?"
Says Bill: "I will."
That night, at just about half-past one,
The bells begun
The awful clangor that tells of fire.
'Twas our old place
That was being burnt.
When Bill learnt
The fact, by his linen coat tail's blaze,
The room was getting about red hot.
There was just one spot
That the fire had managed, so far, to spare—
The press stood there.
Bill wasn't a crier,
And when he saw
There was no use trying to save a thing
Out of the fiery dragon's maw
He gave one spring
For the stock,—there wasn't an atom left.
Bill says the heft
Of his heart, when he found there wasn't one
Identical sheet that he could use,
Was mor'n a ton.
In his two hours' snooze,
He hadn't taken his garments off.
They came off now
That is, he stripped, as if for a row,
Down to the buff,
Let us draw a veil,
And end this tale
With a scene that morning sharp at four
Bill knocked at the door
Of the boss's house, and out he came,
Not knowing the place was aflame;
"Got the paper?" Says Bill: "You're right.
The d—d old office burnt down to-night,
There wasn't no one hurt,
And I got you a copy." Here he gave
The boss, who was just beg inning to rave,
An impression struck off on his shirt.
P. S.—'Twas Bill's shirt, not the boss's;
I tell you Bill was one of the bosses.

Koebplestein's Complaint.

It was an assault and battery case, and the complainant was a tall, lank German, with a quantity of two colored hair and beard. He wore goggles, earring, a ruffled shirt, and pantaloons once white.—"What's your name?" asked his Honor, as he swung lazily round in his revolving chair, and picked up the complaint.

"Otto Koebplestein," said the man.

"Have you been assaulted or beaten by anybody?" continued the Judge, looking out of the window and yawning.

"Yaw, yaw, dat mans," pointing to the prisoner, "hit me mit my het. I was joost standing on dem shidevalk blaying, when——"

"What!" shouted his Honor, suddenly assuming an upright position and glaring at the witness over his spectacles. "What did you say? Playing? With what? On what; What kind of playing? Why don't you answer me? Speak out, can't you?"

"I vas joost blaying mit der pand, V. blays round—"

"Oh, yes; you play round with the band, do you? You are one of those fellows that stand on street corners and frighten horses, and give nervous people convulsions, and play 'Spring, spring, gentle spring,' under people's windows before they are up in the morning. I think I've seen you up in Twenty-fourth street, near my house."

"No, no yer Honor; ve don't go up town dot far; ve joost blays—"

"Yes, yes, you just blays. I'll bet you're the man that plays that little squeaky thing that's always out of tune, and—"

"I blays de drombone," interrupted Mr. Koebplestein, with evident pride.

"Oh, the trombone? That long brass thing that you keep ramming in and pulling out of your mouth, and that comes in three or four notes behind the bass. Well, where did he hit you?"

The witness exhibited a white plaster on the side of his head.

"Is that all?" asked his Honor, with evident disappointment. "Didn't he hurt you any more than that? Young man," turning benignantly to the prisoner, "Young man, you may go. You're discharged. Good day. Now look here, Otto Klop—what a your name—don't you know you're a vagrant? Well you are, and I've a good notion to send you up for thirty days. If I ever catch you swallowing brass around my house I will, sure's you're a Dutchman. Git out of that chair. Put him out, officer. Next."

How He Explained.

A resident of the Sixth Ward has been missing wood from his pile for several weeks past, and the other night he caught a negro loading up a big armful. Springing out he cried:

"Ah! ha! I've caught you, have I?"

"Is dat you?" asked the negro, as he dropped the wood.

"Yes, this is I, and I want to know what you are doing here?"

"Doin' heah?"

"Yes, sir."

"You see dis yere wood-pile, doesn't you?" inquired the darkey.

"Yes, I do."

"Well, dere's a new family moved into dat shanty over dar, and I don't like dere looks one bit. I believe dey'd steal wood quicker'n lightning, and I eum over to warn ye. If ye miss any wood, don't say that I didn't warn ye what kind of people does are."

And he walked away, leaving the man dumbfounded.

Miscellaneous.

Wise Sayings.

Vanity is a strong drink that makes all the virtues stagger.

It is easy to deceive one's self without perceiving it, as it is difficult to deceive others without their finding it out.

It is more from carelessness about the truth than from intentional lying, that there is so much falsehood in the world.

Vegetation turns to coal, and gives light centuries afterward. Alas! that we have seldom so honorable a destiny.

Finery and expenses above a man's rank provoke envy, strife, and slander, and are the ready road to poverty and want.

The furnace of affliction is often the means which Heaven uses to purify the soul from the dross of pride and sensuality.

Personal beauty is a letter of recommendation written by the hand of nature but not unfrequently dishonored by the bearer.

The more honesty a man has the less he affects the air of a saint; the affectation of sanctity is a blotch on the face of piety.

He that never was acquainted with adversity has seen the world but on one side, and is ignorant of half the scenes of nature.

Temptation brings ruin to one and strength to another; not by its innate power, but by simply unveiling the character that is tried.

Censure is most effectual when mixed with praise. So, when a fault is discovered, it is well to look up a virtue to bear it company.

Of what seems a trifle, a mere nothing by itself, in some nice situations turns the scale of fate, and rules the most important actions.

Men often attempt, by the light of reason, to discover the mysteries of eternity. They might as well hold up a candle to see the stars.

The weakest woman is not without power. One such has been known to turn a steamboat excursion into an occasion of gloom and despondency.

The consciousness of being beloved is so grateful to every heart that there are few who seek to question the sincerity of those who tell them they are so.

General love is like a mitten, which fits all hands alike, but none closely; true affection is like a glove, which fits one hand only, but fits closely to that one.

Good spirits are often taken for good nature, yet nothing differs so much; insensibility being generally the source of the former and sensibility the latter.

Good humor and good sense go hand in hand together. Your man who is perpetually serious is a dangerous person—sure, in the long run, to degenerate into a morose lunatic.

If we are loved by those around us, we can bear the hostility of all the rest of the world—just as, when we are before a warm fire, we need not care for all the ice in the polar regions.

The old are allured by gold, the young by pleasure, the weak by flattery, cowards by fear, the courageous by ambition—a thousand baits for each taste, each bait concealing the same deadly hook.

Earthly prosperity, what is it? Earthly honors, what they? Fleeting as vapors which the morning sun dispels; empty as the widow's heart as she kisses the lips of her dead husband.

The wheels of nature are not made to roll backwards; everything presses on towards eternity; from the birth of time an impetuous current has set in, which bears all the sons of men to that interminable ocean.

If the show of anything be good for anything, we are sure sincerity is better; for why does any man dissemble, or seem to be that which he is not, but because he thinks it good to have such a quality as he pretends to?

No man is so foolish but he may give another good counsel sometimes, and no man so wise but he may easily err, if he takes no other counsel than his own.—He that was taught only by himself had a fool for a master.

Christian graces are like perfumes—the more they are pressed the sweeter they smell; like stars that shine brightest in the dark; like trees, the more they are shaken the deeper root they take, and the more fruit they bear.

To diminish envy let us consider not what others possess, but what they enjoy: mere riches may be the gift of lucky accident or blind chance, but happiness must be the result of prudent preference and rational design.

He who is passionate and hasty is generally honest. It is your old, dissembling hypocrite of whom you should beware.—There's no deception in a bull-dog. It is only the cur that sneaks up and bites you when your back is turned.

Men have different spheres. It is for some to envolve great moral truths, as the heavens envolve stars to guide the sailor on the sea and the traveler on the desert; it is for some, like the sailor and the traveler, simply to be guides.

The last, best fruit which comes to late perfection, even in the kindiest soul, is tenderness towards the hard, forbearance towards the unforbearing, warmth of heart towards the cold, philanthropy towards the misanthropic.

Nothing so tyrannizes over one as a habit of jesting and contempt, real or assumed. Success in the use of sarcasm and ridicule rarely fails to make its practice more frequent and its application more wide than is either justifiable in itself or agreeable to listeners.

Deceit and falsehood, whatever conveniences they may for a time promise or produce, are, in the sum of life; obstacles to happiness. Those who profit by the cheat distrust the deceiver, and the act by which kindness was sought puts an end to confidence.

Fortune has the same power over princes that it has over nations—over nations that it has over private men. Where's that estate that may not be followed up on the heel with famine and beggary?—That dignity which the next moment may not be laid in the dust? That kingdom that is secure from desolation and ruin?

The modest deportment of really wise men, when contrasted with the assuming air of the young and ignorant, may be compared to the different appearances of wheat, which, while its ear is empty holds up its head proudly, but as soon as it is filled with grain, bends modestly down, and withdraws from observation.

What I Know About Vegetine.

H. R. Stevens, Esq. South Boston, Feb. 9, 1871.

Dear Sir:—I have had considerable experience with the Vegetine. For dyspepsia, general debility and impure blood, the Vegetine is superior to anything which I have ever used. I commenced taking Vegetine about the middle of last winter, and after using a few bottles it entirely cured me of dyspepsia, and my blood never was in so good order as at the present time. It will afford me pleasure to give any further particulars relative to what I know about this good medicine to any one who will call or address me at my residence, 356 Athens street.

Very respectfully,
MONROE PARKER,
356 Athens street.

DYSPEPSIA.

SYMPTOMS—Want of appetite, rising of food and wind from the stomach, acidity of the stomach, heartburn, dryness and whiteness of the tongue in the morning, nausea, distension in the stomach and bowels, sometimes rumbling pain; costiveness, which is occasionally interrupted by diarrhœa; paleness of the urine. The mouth is clammy, or has a sour or bitter taste. Other frequent symptoms are waterbrash, pain or dull pain of the heart, headache, and disorders of the senses, as seeing double, etc. There is general debility or great aversion to motion; dejection of the spirits, disturbed sleep, and frightful dreams.

Gained Fifteen Pounds of Flesh.

South Berwick, Me., Jan. 17, 1872.

H. R. Stevens, Esq:

Dear Sir.—I have had dyspepsia in its worst form for the last ten years, and have taken hundreds of dollars' worth of medicine without obtaining any relief. In September last I commenced taking the Vegetine, since which time my health has steadily improved.

My food digests well, and I have gained fifteen pounds of flesh. There are several others in this place taking the Vegetine, all have obtained relief.

Yours, truly,
THOMAS E. MOORE,
Overseer of card room, Portsmouth Co.'s Mills.

ALL DISEASES OF THE BLOOD.

If Vegetine will relieve pain, cleanse, purify an cure such diseases, restoring the pe ple t th perfect health after trying different physicians, many remedies, suffering for years, is it not conclusive proof, if you are a sufferer you can be cured? Why is this medicine performing such great cures? It works in the blood in the circulating fluid. It can truly be called the Great Blood Purifier. The great source of disease originates in the blood, and no medicine that does not act directly upon it, purify and renovate has any just claim upon public attention.

GOOD EVIDENCE.

Cincinnati, Nov. 26, 1872.

Mr. H. R. Stevens:

Dear Sir—The two bottles of Vegetine furnished me by your agent my wife has used with great benefit. For a long time she has been troubled with dizziness and costiveness; these troubles are now entirely removed by the use of Vegetine.

She was also troubled with dyspepsia and general debility, and has been greatly benefited.

THOMAS GILMORE,
229½ Walnut Street.

RELIABLE EVIDENCE.

H. R. Stevens:

Dear Sir—I will most cheerfully add my testimony to the great number you have already received in favor of your great and good medicine Vegetine. For I do not think enough can be said in its praise, for I was troubled over thirty years with that dreadful disease, Catarrh, and had such bad counhing spells that I would seem as though I could never breathe any more, and Vegetine has cured me; and I do feel to thank God all the time that there is so good a medicine as Vegetine, and I also think it one of the best medicines for coughs and weak sinking feelings at the stomach; and advise everybody to take the Vegetine. For I can assure them it is one of the best medicines that ever was.

APPRECIATION.

Charleston, Mass., March 19 1869.

H. R. Stevens:

This is to certify that I have used your "Blood Preparation" (Vegetine) in my family for several years, and think that, for scrofula or Cankerous Humorous or Rheumatic affections, it cannot be excelled; and as a blood purifier and spring medicine it is the best thing I ever used; and I have used almost everything. I can cheerfully recommend it to any one in need of such a medicine.

Yours respectfully,

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from a thirty years' successful practice that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

JURUBEBA

has established itself as a perfect regulator and sure REMEDY for disorders of the system arising from its proper action of the Liver and Bowels.

IT IS NOT A PHYSIC, but, by stimulating the secretive organs, gently and gradually removes all impurities, and regulates the entire system.

IT IS NOT A DOCTORED BITTERS, but is a

VEGETABLE TONIC

which assists digestion, and thus stimulates the appetite for food necessary to invigorate the weakened or inactive organs, and gives strength to all the vital forces.

IT CARRIES ITS OWN RECOMMENDATION, as the large and rapidly increasing sales testify. Price One Dollar a bottle. Ask your druggist for it. JOHNSTON HOLLOWAY & CO., Wholesale Agents, Phila., Pa. 30w4
