Select Poetry

DISCONTENTMENT.
I thought the fair Adonis,
The rose of wondrous complexion,
The sweetest girl in all the town,
She pressed with such exquisite softness,
Her hair of burn, eyes of blue,
From which the sunset gleamed,
Her cheeks were of the lily's hue,
Which attracted back the rosy blushes,
When first she flashed across my way,
I never saw a vision sweeter,
Her step seemed lightly airy,
Attuned to some divine music,
And when amid a festive throng,
She smiled, all levity and laughter,
One-half the world would gaze upon her,
The other half would follow after.
