WHAT ANDREW JOHNSON SAID IN 1860.

In the United States Senate, December 19, 1860, Andrew Johnson, Senator from the State of Tennessee, said: "I believe we have the power in our own hands, and I am not willing to shrink from the responsibility of exercising that power."

SOCIAL WINE DRINKING.

The Christian Secretary gives the following graphic illustration of the terrible results often arising from social indulgence in the wine cup: At an Episcopal convention, a discussion on temperance brought up the "wine question."

THE JEWESSES.

Fontanes asked Chateaubrain "if he could assign a reason why the women of the Jewish race were so much handsomer than the men?" To which Chateaubrain gave the following poetical and Christian one:

THE DELEGATES FROM MASSACHUSETTS AND SOUTH CAROLINA WALKING ARM IN ARM.

Such is the announcement made in the Jeff Davis Convention, and many of our readers will ask, "who are these distinguished gentlemen?" We can inform them. The Massachusetts man is one Gen. Couch, who had command of the Pennsylvania Militia during the rebel raid in this State, and who at that time retired very suddenly, with a large body of infantry, from Chambersburg, so that a few rebel cavalry might burn the town, and who after he arrived in Harrisburg, had a train of cars with a locomotive attached and steam up standing ready for a whole week in the Lebanon Valley depot awaiting the arrival of his rebel friends in Harrisburg, thus enabling him to leave very suddenly and give the invader possession of the town.

VALLANDIGHAM HAS AT LENGTH GOT HIS PRICE!

The President has had a rough time dispensing his patronage, first, to get dough faces into the Rebel Johnson Convention; and second, to keep noisy North ern sympathizers with treason out of that assemblage. The patronage of the post offices and custom houses was used with a lavish hand to secure men of seeming patriotism to act as delegates. It was expected that in purchasing men to degrade themselves to this service the trouble would end. But in this, Rebel Johnson finds he was mistaken. He must now use the patronage of the State department to enjoin abnoxious customers like Vallandigham from forcing himself into the convention.

A YOUNG LADY'S REASONS FOR NOT DANCING.

1. Dancing would lead me into crowded rooms and late hours, which are injurious to health and usefulness. 2. Dancing would lead me into close contact with very promiscuous company, and "evil communications corrupt good manners."
