TO-MORROW.

We can't recall the vanished past,
Nor on the future reckon;
The light-winged hours, flying fast
To embrace them, beckon.

No more let Folly shroud thine eyes;
Live while 'tis called to-day;
What if you setting sun should rise
To warm thy lifeless clay?

Life is not given; 'tis but lent;
And thousands yet would borrow.
For past, for present, time mis-spent,
A day of grace to-morrow.

Oh, day of hope! oh, day of fear!
Foreboding joy or sorrow;
That comest not, though ever near,
To-morrow! still to-morrow!

in loco parentis, and been throughout life her best friend.

"M. Baisson went to his mother in law's house, saw his daughter, told her that he would never give his consent to the marriage, and moreover, that he would no longer allow her to live with her grandmother, and that she must come away with him directly. The young lady, in obedience to this parental command, packed up her trunks and got into her father's carriage, which was in waiting. But the carriage had only gone a few yards when she suddenly opened the door, at the risk of breaking her neck, jumped out into the street, and ran back to her grandmother's. M. Baisson thought it undesirable to make a scene by attempting then and there to bring his daughter away by force. He contented himself by saying that he was inflexible, and she would hear from him in a few days. When next he went to the house he was informed that the whole family had gone away, and had left no address.

"M. Baisson went over almost all Europe in search of his daughters. He inquired at all the German watering places, and at every town in Belgium, but without any result. At length he hit upon the expedient of sending a money letter to the grandmother at her old address at Paris, and he learned, through the post office, that this letter was delivered to the very army surgeon whose pretensions to his eldest daughter's hand formed the casus belli. He afterwards found that the two girls were concealed under false names in a Catholic convent in Glasgow. Thereupon he brought an action against the mother-in-law, requiring her to bring the girls back to France and hand them over to his custody. The Tribunal of First Instance made a decree in his favor and ordered the young ladies grandmother to pay one thousand francs a day for two months unless the girls were restored to their father. She, thinking that the penalty of this decree would be the worst of the matter, let the two months expire, and actually paid the large sum of sixty thousand francs into court—a sum that she was prepared to sacrifice rather than surrender the girls to their obdurate father. But then he brought another action, laying the damages at a million of francs.

"M. Desmarest, the lady's counsel, told her that the law was altogether on the father's side, and that if she did not give the children up he might go on bringing actions until he utterly ruined her. Acting upon M. Desmarest's advice, the grandmother has now brought the young ladies back from Glasgow. The father has gained his point; they are now in his custody. The only question ultimately before the court was, what damages she should pay to the father for interfering with his authority. The sum, after his counsel, M. Jules Payre, had been heard, was fixed at five thousand francs, and the balance of the sixty thousand francs interest is to be refunded to the lady. As matters now stand M. Baisson cannot marry in France till twenty-five, without her father's consent, but in a few months she will be twenty-one, and then he will have no legal right to prevent her from living where she pleases."

AN ARCTIC ADVENTURE.

ENCOUNTER WITH AN ICEBERG.

Dr. Hays, in his new work, "The open Polar Sea," thus relates a dangerous encounter with an iceberg:

"Giving too little heed to the currents, we were eagerly watching the indication of the wind which appeared at the south, and hoping for a breeze, when it was discovered that the tide had changed and was stealthily setting us upon a nest of bergs, which lay to leeward. One of them was of that description known among the crew by the significant title of 'touch me not,' and presented that jagged, honey-combed appearance indicative of great age. They are unpleasant neighbors.—The least disturbance of their equilibrium may cause the whole mass to crumble to pieces, and was he unto the unlucky vessel that is caught in the dissolution.

"In such a trap it seemed, however, that we stood a fair chance of being ensnared. The current was carrying us along at an uncomfortable rapid rate. A boat was lowered as quickly as possible, to run out a line to a berg which lay grounded about a hundred yards from us. While this was being done, we grazed the side of a berg which rose a hundred feet above our topsails, then slipped past another of smaller dimensions. By pushing against them with our ice poles we changed somewhat the course of the schooner; but when we thought that we were steering clear of the mass which we so much dreaded, an eddy changed the direction of our drift, and carried us almost broadside upon it.

"The schooner struck on the starboard quarter, and the shock, slight though it was, disengaged some fragments of ice that were large enough to have crushed the vessel had they struck her, and also many little lumps which rattled about us; but fortunately no person was hit. The quarter deck was quickly cleared, and all hands crowding forward anxiously watched the boat. The berg now began to revolve, and as settling slowly over us; the little lumps fell thicker and faster upon the after-deck, and the fore-castle was the only place where there was the least chance of safety.

"At length the berg itself saved us from destruction. An immense mass broke off from that part which was beneath the surface of the sea, and this, a dozen times larger than the schooner, came rushing up within a few yards of us, sending a vast volume of foam and water flying from its sides. This rupture arrested the revolution, and the berg began to settle in the opposite direction.—And now came another danger. A long tongue was protruding immediately underneath the schooner; already the keel was slipping and grinding upon it, and it seemed probable that we should be knocked up in the air like a foot ball, or at least capsized. The side of our enemy soon leaned from us, and we were in no danger from the worse than hailstone showers which had driven us forward; so we sprang to the ice-poles and exerted our strength in endeavoring to push the vessel off. There were no idle hands. Danger respects not the dignity of the quarter-deck.

"After we had fatigued ourselves at this hard labor without any useful result, the berg came again to our relief. A loud report first startled us; another and another followed in quick succession, until the noise grew deafening and the whole air seemed a reservoir of frightful sound. The opposite side of the berg had split off, piece after piece, tumbling a vast volume of ice into the sea, and sending the berg revolving back upon us. This time the movement was quicker; fragments began again to fall, and already sufficiently startled by the alarming dissolution which had taken place, we were in momentary expectation of seeing the whole side nearest to us break loose and crash bodily upon the schooner, in which event she would inevitably be carried down beneath it, as hopelessly doomed as a shepherd's hut beneath an Alpine avalanche.

"By this time Dodge, who had charge of the boat, had succeeded in planting an ice-anchor, and attaching his rope, and greeted us with the welcome signal, 'Haul in.' We pulled for our lives, long and steadily. Seconds seemed minutes and minutes hours. At length we began to move off. Slowly and steadily sank the berg behind us, carrying away the main boom and grating hard against the quarter.
