CHARITY. In the hour of keenest sorrow— In the hour of deepest woe— Wait thou for the coming morrow, To the sad and suffering go— Make it the sincerest pleasure To administer relief— Freely opening thy treasure To assuage a brother's grief.

Go and seek the orphan sighing— Seek the widow in her tears; As on mercy's pinions flying, Go, dispel their darkest fear: Seek the stranger sad and weary, Pass not on the other side, Though the task be sad and dreary, Heeding not the scorn of pride.

Go with manners unassuming In a meek and quiet way— O'er the father's ear presuming, Though thy brother sadly stray: 'Tis a Saviour's kind compassion— 'Tis his righteousness alone, All unmerited salvation, That around thy path hath shorn.

When thy heart is warmly glowing With the sacred love of prayer, Be thy works of kindness flowing Not as with a miser's care: Duty e'er should be thy watchword— Pity drop the balmy tear: Always toward the fallen cherish Sympathy and love sincere.

MISCELLANEOUS READING. JEFF DAVIS.

THE TRIAL OF THE EX-REBEL CHIEF—SCENES IN THE COURT ROOM—THE REBEL YELL AGAIN—A MELODRAMATIC AFFAIR.

RICHMOND, May 13.—The title of one of Wendell Phillips' best lectures, "The South Triumphant," is no longer an idea of fancy. It had a most remarkable illustration in the United States Circuit Court here to-day.

Horace Greeley, Augustus Schell, William M. Everts, William B. Reed, Chas. O'Connor, rebel General Imboden, Fitz Hugh Lee, with John Mitchell, Patrick Henry Aylett, Judge Lyons, Dr. Maddox, who shot a Union soldier in Alexandria last year; Rev. Dr. Minnegerode, Jeff Davis' spiritual adviser, and other prominent rebels, entered with due form and ceremony, and occupied what might be termed the orchestra chairs.

Davis looked well, though troubled with a slight cough. After the play had commenced, Davis was escorted from the prisoners' dock to a seat between Charles O'Connor and William B. Reed, which he occupied during the performance.

The return to the writ of habeas corpus occasioned some little parley between the counsel. After a sort of a prologue from William M. Everts and District Attorney Chandler the trial of the distinguished prisoner was in order.

The intervening scenes, however, were not without their due effect and importance.

DAVIS UNBOUND.

When Judge Underwood agreed to admit Davis to bail, Charles O'Connor commenced to call the names of bailsmen.—The first was Horace Greeley, who stepped up to the clerk's desk with a smiling face, amid the silent admiration of the rebels present.

As soon as Judge Underwood announced that the prisoner was discharged, Davis left the court room and proceeded to his carriage. As he emerged from the building the air was rent with cheers upon cheers, and the rebels stood with uncovered heads, The United States troops who were on guard along the square looked ineffably mean.

After his arrival at the hotel Davis held a levee in the ladies' parlor. He was literally surrounded by admirers, who consisted of Southern rebels and Northern fanatics.

Hand shaking was now in order, and such a welcome has seldom been witnessed. Old men and young wives and maidens cried like children, for very joy, as they clasped the hand of the defied chief. Davis is politician enough to know that these demonstrations will not do him any good at the North, and with the Radicals, who virtually control the Government.

He leaves here to-night for New York, from whence he will probably proceed to New Hampshire to visit poor Frank Pierce.—He will then return to Mississippi. Judge Underwood and District Attorney Chandler are not to blame for to-day's work.—They were really ready to try Davis.—William M. Everts, however, who is Seward's particular friend, and who, in connection with Andrew Johnson, Attorney General Stanberry, Seward and Greeley, arranged the whole affair, at Washington, said the Government was not ready to proceed with the trial.

Millions are looking on, and expect you to do your duty.

The result of two days' business will be the final release of Davis. Nobody ever expects to see him brought to trial. His sureties are willing to pay the forfeit of the bond if he leaves the country. It is only one hundred thousand instead of half a million. So ends the last act of the slaveholders' rebellion.

Horace Greeley has all of a sudden become quite a lion with the rebels. They have invited him to speak to-morrow evening on the state of the country, in the African Methodist Church, and he has consented. It is probable they will give him a public dinner.

Precious.—An urehin leading a small dog along the streets some days ago was accosted by a gentleman as follows: "Well, my son, what is your dog's name?" "Hain't got any name yet."

"Well, why don't you name him?" "Give him some good name. Call him Thad Stevens."

"I don't like to do that, 't would be disrespectful to Mr. Stevens."

"Well, then, name him Andrew Johnson."

"I won't do that neither, for that would be disrespectful to the dog!"

THE CURTIN DROPS ON ANOTHER SCENE IN THE JOHNSON DAVIS FARCE.

For two long years Jefferson Davis, the acknowledged head and front of the great rebellion, has been held in prison solely by Andrew Johnson, in virtue of his military authority as commander-in-chief of the armies of the United States.

The curtain drops on another scene in the Johnson Davis farce. For two long years Jefferson Davis, the acknowledged head and front of the great rebellion, has been held in prison solely by Andrew Johnson, in virtue of his military authority as commander-in-chief of the armies of the United States.

The scenes were elaborately arranged; the parts were all carefully studied. From the moment that Judge Underwood began to so superfluously compliment the military officer in charge of the prisoner, the issue of the application was evident to any man who has any acquaintance with the procedure of a court-room.

The mutual admiration of the counsel on either side and the court, speedily disclosed the fact that there would be no real argument or contest.

At last, after transferring his prisoner from the military to the civil authority, the law officer of the Government states that he is not ready for trial, and Jefferson Davis, who is committed to answer for the destruction of millions of Government property, and the loss of hundreds of thousands of lives, is admitted to bail in a hundred thousand dollars.

The course of the Executive in the whole matter has shown an utter lack of nerve to do either right or wrong. It reflects only discredit and humiliation on the people.

It is evident that it would perhaps be inexpedient to try Mr. Davis under the management of the present Administration. His trial for treason might establish a precedent the wrong way, and Andrew Johnson will not likely push forward an honest investigation of the facts attending the assassination of President Lincoln.

Jefferson Davis will be punished like Aaron Burr, and Benedict Arnold, by the detestation and curses of a great people. He will drop from sight, and be a stranger in his own land—a man without a country.—Forney's Press, 14th instant.

HAD 'EM.—One evening a parent was hearing his little son, Johnny, recite his Sunday school lesson. It was in the 13th chapter of Matthew, wherein it relates of the malicious individual who went about sowing tares, &c.

"What is a tare?" interrupted the father. Johnny hesitated.

"Tell me, my son, what a tare is." "You have had 'em," said Johnny, casting down his eyes, and wriggling his foot.

"Had 'em?" said the astonished parent, opening his eyes rather wide, "why, what do you mean, Johnny?"

"When you didn't come home for three days last week," said Johnny, "I heard mother tell Aunt Susan you were on a tare." The Sunday School lesson was brought to a close, and Johnny, who knew too much altogether to sit up later, was sent to bed.

TIGHT LACING.—A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette gives an account of a fatal accident which occurred in Dayton a few days ago, the result of tight lacing. A young lady much given to the practice, caused a hook to be placed in the wall of her room, to which she was in the habit of fastening her corset strings so as to be able to draw them tighter. The other day she threw herself too heavily on the strings, and broke a blood vessel, from which she died in a few hours.

At a Radical meeting in Shelby county, Tennessee, a day or two since, a colored orator, who was a slave two years ago, said: "The Rebels are trying to use us as catspaws; they say we ought to hold office; but seven years ago we didn't hold anything but a hoe-handle, and would not now if they could have their way."

Wisdom is the olive which springs from the heart, blooms on the tongue, and bears fruit from the action.
