AFFECTING INCIDENT.

The play was a comedy The chief actor was a favorite one, and the theatre was very crowded. The curtain drew up, and, amidst a burst of applause, the hero of the piece made his appearance. He had hardly uttered twenty words, when it struck me that something strange was the matter with him. The play was boisterous comedy of the old school, and required considerable spirit and vivacity in the actors to sustain it properly; but in this We always keep on hand from twenty to man there was none; he walked and talked like a person in a dream; his best points he passed over without appearing to notice them; and, altogether, he appeared quite unfitted for his part. His smile was ghastly, laugh hollow and unnatural; and frequently he would stop suddenly in his speech and let his eye wander vacantly over the audience.

Even when, in his character of a silly husband, he had to suffer himself to be WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of comedy, and afterwards to behold that careless individual making love to his wife, and eating his supper while he was shut up in a closet, from whence he could not emerge, his contortions of ludicrous wrath, which had never before failed to call down plenty of applause, were new such dismal attempts to portray the passion, that hisses were audible in various parts of the theatre. The audience were fairly out of temper, and several inquisitive individuals indulged in inquiries as to the extent of the potations part, Store Coal, Smith Coal and Lime bur- he had indulged in that evening. A storm of sibilation and abuse now fell around the cars of the devoted actor; and not content with verbal insult, orange peel and appies flew upon the stage.

He stopped, and turned to the shouting crowd. I never saw such misery in a human countenance. His face was worn and haggard, and large tears rolled down his painted cheeks. I saw his lips quiver with inward agony, I saw his bosom heave with convulsions of suppressed emotion, and his whole mien betoken such depth of anguish and distress that the most ruththe clamor of invective subsided into a solemn silence, while he stood near the all was calm, he spoke, and in a voice broken with sobs that seemed to rend his

"Ladies and gentlemen," said he, "though in my acting to-night I am conscious of meriting your displeasure, in one thing you do me wrong. I am not intoxicated. Emotion alone, and that of the most painful kind, has caused me to fulfil my alloted part so badiy. My wife died but a few short hours ago, and I left her side to fulfil my unavoidable engagement here. If I have not pleased you, I implore of you to forgive me. I loved her, grieved for her; and if misery my apology-here !"

He piaced his hand upon his heart and stopped, and a burst of tears relieved his stru of applause by which the crowd sought to soothe the poor fellow's wounded feelings.

There was something very melancholy in the thoughts of that wretched man's coming from the bed of death, to don gay attire, and utter studied witticisms for the amusement of a crowd, not one of whom dreamed of the anguish that lay festering under the painted theek and stage smile, And, in the great theatre of life, how many are there around us like that poor actor, smiling gayly at the multitude, while at home lies sorrow, whose shadows are present with him in busy places.

HUMOROUS ACCOUNT BY MARK TWAIN, OF A DIMNER AT FAYAL

Speaking of those prodigious Portuguese pennies remines me that it takes one thousand reis (pronounced rays) to make a dollar, and that all financial estimates are made out in reis. We did not know this until after we found it out, and found it out through Blucher. Blucher said he was so happy and so grateful to be on solid hand once more that he wanted to give a feast-said he had heard it was a cherp land, and he was bound to have a grand banquet. He invited nine of us, and we ate an excellent dinner at the principal hotel. In the midst of the jollity produced by good eigars, good wine, and passable anecdotes, the landlord presented his bill. Blucher glanced at it and his countenance fell. He took an other look to assure himself that his seu ses had not deceived him, and then read the items in a faltering voice, while the roses in his check turned to ashes:

" 'Ten dinners, at 600 reis, 6,000 reis! Rain and desolution !"

" Twenty-five eigars at 100 reis, 2,500 reis!' Oh, my sainted mother !"

"Eleven bottles of wine at 1 200 reis 13.200 reis.' Be with us all! 'Total 22,000 reis.' Great Cresar's ghost! there ain't money enough in the ship to pay that bill! Go-leave me to my misery, boys, I'm a ruined community"
