CHAPTER I. A PATEFUL CATASTROPHE.

A wild storm was raging upon the Mediterranean Sea, near the close of a dreary November day, and sky and waters were black with the gloom of the sudden and furious tempest, before which a small sailing vessel was scudding the bare poles. Her build and rigging proclaimed her Sardinian. She was The Gull, Captain Varioo master, on her way from Cagliuri to Palermo.

She had on board two seamen, and two passengers.

These passengers were Englishmen who had procured passage on The Gull to Palermo, whence they intended to embark by steamer to Marseilles, the following day.

While the Captain and his assistants were attending to their duties, and ex- wave sweeping over the deck, interrupted der "And a bad sky!" pressing apprehensions as to their safety. the two Englishmen stood apart, leaning against the low bulwarks, and surveying the wild scene around them.

These men were both young, apparently of the same age, about three and twenty, but evidently they were not of the same station in life.
