Poet's Corner.
PROGRESS.

Does the earth contain one spirit
Bowled down to the dust,
On the midnight of whose vision
Beams no star of hope and trust?
Let that soul be pause and ponder
On the works the past has done,
And an earnest, bright and glorious,
For the future shall be won.
For the soul must feel the stirring
Of its destiny sublime,
Who but rightly views the present,
With its earnest heart and mind:
Tolling in the earthly vineyard
Many hands have found a place:
Some are nearing to the summit—
Some are at the mountain's base.
Progress is the stirring watchword—
Cheers them upward to the height:
Canst thou pause and play the laggard
With its glories laid in sight?
And while fair and broad and glorious,
In our vision we can see,
Still the future brightly stretching
Into fair infinity.
Who shall tell what bond or barrier
To improvement heaven designed?
Who shall dare to fix the limits
To the onward march of mind?
Only He, who into being
Called the unformed human soul,
He for whom the hymn of progress
Through eternity shall roll!

Miscellaneous Reading.
THE CONDEMNED;
An Incident of the Rebellion.

From the Franklin Repository.
On a quiet Sunday afternoon, in the month of December, 1863, while sojourning in Juniata county, I was called upon by some prominent citizens of that locality, with letters from soldiers of their acquaintance, conveying the melancholy intelligence that their comrade in arms, Joseph R., had been tried by a court martial on the charge of desertion, found guilty, and that the sentence of death would be carried into effect the following Thursday. The wife and some of the neighbors of the doomed man were exceedingly anxious that some effort should be made to save his life, if possible, and, as his time was fast ebbing away, speedy action was imperative. We decided, after consultation, to make an affidavit as to his previous good character and indolent habits of life, and to get Governor Curtin, whose support could always be relied upon in any effort for the comfort or relief of a Pennsylvania soldier to apply to the President for pardon. As I was going to Philadelphia the next morning, I aimed myself with the testimonials from his neighbors and stopped at Harrisburg to hand the case over, agreeably to our arrangements, to the Governor, and to request his prompt and friendly interference in the matter.— This much, and no more, I had with great pleasure agreed to do, as I knew the condemned since boyhood, and often, when a boy myself, waited on him in a store, when we both lived in Fannett township, Franklin county. Presenting the papers and stating the case briefly to the Governor, he said:
"I cannot assume the responsibility of taking charge of the case exclusively, nor do I believe the execution can be arrested, unless you see the President and have him specially attend to it. Only a few days since a soldier from my own region was shot, and his pardon, which I procured, reached the army a few hours after he was shot. It was a sad case, as he was the only son of his mother, and she was a widow," and having come into the State at the Battle of Gettysburg, was tempted to slip off on a visit to his mother. I got the pardon, but the machinery was too slow to save his life; and so it is likely to be in this case, and unless you go to Washington and see that the pardon reaches him in time, he will be shot certainly. I will give you a letter to the President, but you must carry it in person, and it will be some consolation for you to know, hereafter, that you were mainly the means of saving this poor fellow's life."
Not until now did I realize the fearful responsibility of my position, and there appeared to be no escape from the Governor's positive requirements. As Congress was not then in session, having adjourned over the Christmas holidays, and knowing the great difficulty there was in getting access to the President without the aid of a member of Congress, I went on to Philadelphia, hoping to get one of the city members either to take the papers to Washington and attend to the case, or at least to get one of them to go with me. Not finding any of them and there being no time to spare, I went on the same night, having previously ascertained that a member of Congress from Pennsylvania of my acquaintance, was there.
When the war began, the army regulations required that all sentences of court martial, imposing the death, should be approved by the President of the United States. Several such sentences were pronounced on soldiers for desertion about the close of the first year of the war, but such was the great kindness of

THE FOOL AND THE HIGHWAYMAN.
Never heard of Redmond O'Hanlon, the Irish highway robber? Well, that's surprising. Your English Turpins and French Durals couldn't hold a candle to our highwayman. But for all his shrewdness he met his match once, and I'll tell you how it was.
Redmond was a fine, strapping, gentlemanly fellow, and a devoted admirer of the ladies—as where is the Irishman that is not? and what is more, a friend to the poor; as you'll admit when I tell you that his demands for cash were only made on persons who could well afford to meet them, and that he delighted in forcing contributions from those who had the name of hard landlords to their tenants. There was one of this class whom Redmond never lost an opportunity of taxing—for that was the polite name he gave to his own robberies. Every quarter day this gentleman or one of his servants—sometimes more than one—used to take a journey of six or seven miles to collect his rents, and as regular as clock work there was Redmond O'Hanlon, with some stout companions if necessary, to waylay the collector as he returned home. Every means was used to elude him, but to no purpose. He had spies everywhere, and contrived to get the exact information he needed in advance.
So one quarter day, when the gentleman's servants asked about going for the rents, he swore at O'Hanlon, and said he didn't see the use of collecting money to hand it over to him.
Now this gentleman had on his estate a boy called "Jerry the Fool," who had the run of the house, and made fun for the family. He had a great conceit for himself, and when he heard what the master said, he immediately asked to be allowed to go after the rents for once, and declared he would know the way to bring them safe home. Of course he was only laughed at; but when he represented that no harm could come from trying, as he couldn't do worse than all who had gone before him, the master agreed to humor him. Upon that Jerry made such preparations as he thought suitable, chose the worst horse in the stable—an old hack half blind and three-quarters lame—and started on his enterprise. Nothing occurred on the way. He collected a considerable amount of money, carefully disposed it about his person, and started homeward. Towards evening, as he was quietly jogging along on the old hack and was just entering a long lane with high hedges on each side, a tall fine looking man rode up to him on a handsome roan mare.
"God save you, my man!" says the gentleman.
"God save your honor!" replies Jerry.
"What's your name, my man?" asked the gentleman.
"Jerry the Fool, and I ain't ashamed of it. What's yours?"
"The gentleman took no notice of the question. After a while he says,
"That's a fine animal you're riding, Jerry."
"Faith, I'm glad your honor likes it," says Jerry; but it isn't myself that'd care to take a lease of his life. But he'd serve my turn any way, for it's not in a hurry I'm travelling—I've only been to the village beyond to collect the master's rents for him."
"Surely he is not such a fool as to trust you with that job?"
"Arrah, why not?" asked Jerry in great surprise.
"Why don't you know that Redmond O'Hanlon's on this road?"
"Redmond O'Hanlon, is it," says Jerry. "Ugh! That for Redmond O'Hanlon!" says he snapping his fingers. "Faix, Jerry the Fool is a match for half a dozen of the likes of him any day in the week, Sunday into the bargain."
The stranger laughed, and they rode on in silence until they came to a very lonely part of the road, when he drew a brace of pistols, and told Jerry to hand over all the money he had about him, or he'd try if he had any brains by sending a couple of bullets through his head.
"Meads Murderer," roars Jerry, in a tone of surprise and fright. "You don't mean to say your honor's Redmond O'Hanlon?"
"I do, indeed. So hand over, my man, and look sharp about it."
"But, faix, its kilt entirely by the master I'll be if I go home without the rent."
"What's that to me?" said O'Hanlon.
"Anyhow," says Jerry, "I must show them that I had a murdering fight for it. Perhaps your honor wouldn't mind firing a shot through my old beaver?"
O'Hanlon did so, laughing at the trick.
"And now another through the breast of my coat, and Heaven bless you."
This was done. "Now, just one in the skirt of it, and good luck to your honor."
"But I've discharged both my pistols, and don't want the trouble of loading them again for you."
"Faix, I should dearly like a shot through the skirts; it would show I fought desperate. Are you sure your honor hasn't another pistol in your pocket that you wouldn't mind firing for a poor boy's sake?"

TERRIBLE OUTRAGE IN BALTIMORE.
A BRAVE WOMAN.
Attempted Midnight Assassination—A Woman Defends Herself, and Puts the Robber to Flight.

On Tuesday last, the 22nd inst., Mrs. Saracco, who lives on Charles street, Baltimore, went to bed on a pallet on the floor down stairs, owing to the up stars being damp from house cleaning.— Her husband was a way, and there was no one else in the house, except a colored boy, who slept in the basement.
She was awakened in the night by some one stumbling over her, and immediately afterwards was seized by the throat. She asked the man what he wanted, and he answered that he wanted her money. The Baltimore American thus describes the terrible struggle that ensued:
"She told him she had no money.— He then told her he would kill her, and laced at her throat with a razor. Mrs. Saracco is a woman about 45 years of age, very stout and muscular, and would be a match for most ordinary men in a struggle where there were no weapons except those which nature provided, and the nerve and desperate courage she exhibited on this occasion would put to the blush many of our modern heroes. While the parley was going on, in her recumbent position (she was lying on a pallet which had been temporarily placed on the floor), she kicked the ruffian entirely across the room and against the door, and sprang to her feet. She seized a chair and struck him with it, he still cutting at her with the razor. Feeling the blood gushing from the wound in her throat, she caught up a pillow, doubling and pressing it to the gash with one hand to stay the flow of blood, while with the other she grappled and fought the wretch until either from weariness and cowardice or fright occasioned by the overthrowing of the dog kennel on the porch, he made for the window, the lady still clinging to him even after he had gotten partly out, as was evidenced by the blood which dripped from her wounds to the pavement below. During the whole of the struggle she screamed for assistance, but the colored boy in the basement slept soundly, and did not awake until the lady unlocked his door and called him to her assistance. A large bull terrier, in its effort to break the chain which bound it, overturned the dog house, and probably saved Mrs. Saracco's life, as this is thought to have hastened the ruffian's retreat.
"Mrs. Saracco received two severe gashes on the throat, one down the side of her face, one across the mouth, and one across the palm of the right hand where she had seized the razor. She must have lost an immense quantity of blood. Her clothing and the bed clothes were thoroughly saturated. The sides of the room were spattered with blood, and the bloody prints of the assassin's fingers were distinctly marked on the window sill.
A colored man has been arrested on suspicion of being the party making the attack.
"The Scientific American says it is now impossible to construct a burglar-proof safe, for the thief, with his cylinders of compressed hydrogen and oxygen, can in a few seconds burn holes of any size in the hardest metal—his fire drill enabling him in a few minutes to work his way into the strongest safe that was ever constructed.
Augustus Hay, while driving across the railroad track at Reading on the morning of the 26th ult., was struck by a passenger train and killed. The horse was also killed and the wagon demolished.
"There are three things," said a wit, "which I have loved without understanding them—painting, music, and women."

A Texas postoffice has sent forward a letter addressed "Miss Louesser Oreole, Kansas City Misery."
The importation of canary birds has become an extensive business, involving a capital of over $1,000,000 yearly.
One of the spots recently seen on the sun has been estimated by Prof. Langley to be ten times the area of the earth.
Professor Agassiz pronounces the big California tree, a section of which was taken to Boston, to be over 1,800 years of age.
A thirty-inch railroad track is to be built between Allentown and Harrisburg, to test the value and feasibility of a narrow-gauge railway.
President Willis, of Oglethorpe College, Ga., says that State has 60,000 adults who cannot read, and urges free schools.
A Wisconsin boy went fishing with a gun and caught 195 pickeral in two days—seven at one shot. Ten weighed 115 pounds.
Ten millions of dollars are invested in the manufacture of jewelry at Newark, N. J. It is the workshop of the New York jewelers.
An army of caterpillars is on the move through southern Illinois, devouring in its march leaves, buds, and everything of a succulent nature.
Indigo, bound dry on the wound, is a sure cure for rattlesnake bites, scorpion and bee stings, &c., says a Mormon who has tried it.
Horses are cheap in California. A despatch from that State, under date of April 25th, says: "Horses are being sold at $13 each, in Los Angeles county.
About four hundred black bass from the Potomac have been purchased with funds raised by the citizens of West Chester, and put in the Brandywine.
About 80,000 head of cattle, in 100 droves, have left the Texas counties, west of the Guadalupe, for Kansas this spring, besides those that crossed above Gonzales.
A man who stepped into a basket of eggs was arrested for cruelty to inebriated animals, but he plead not guilty, because he said, he was merely freeing them from their yolks.
A "wood ibis," a very rare bird in this country, was recently captured at Jones' Bluff, Alabama. It is sixty-one inches high and eighty-five inches from tip to tip of the wings.
Eleven thousand five hundred salmon were obtained some time since to stock the Delaware with the fish. Out of this number about 10,000 salmon have been hatched.
In Phoenixville, a little child fell into a well. A man went down the rope, took the child's hair between his teeth and clambered out. It was a "latr-breath escape."
Recently, a woman was observed promiscuously the main thoroughfare of Kansas City composedly smoking a cigarette, while her neck looking husband walked behind, carrying the baby.
A few iron nails, placed in a vase with flowers, will keep the water sweet and the flowers fresh. This arises from the sulphur eliminated from the plants, combined with the iron.
Margaret Nolan was awarded last week by the Supreme Court of Kings county, New York, $5,000 for the loss of her husband, killed by the falling of the roof of the Novelty Iron Works.
The editor of a western paper in his last issue says: "We cannot exist any longer on firewood, maple sugar and sheepskins. We bid our patrons good-by, and offer for sale 200 bushels seed potatoes, slightly frost-bitten.
Two elegantly dressed lady shop-lifters were arrested by the Syracuse police one day last week. On examination it was found that each of them had two large linen sacks suspended under their skirts by ropes tied around the waist.
There is a story of a Paris lady who was so overcome by her appetite as to eat her beloved lap-dog. After a hearty meal she looked down at the little heap of bones; tears fell from her eyes. "Poor Bijou!" she exclaimed, "how he would have enjoyed them!"
PUT THAT AND THAT TOGETHER.— On Monday, April 10th, five hundred barrels of Cincinnati whisky were landed on the levee in Louisville. On Wednesday, the 12th, the Louisville Courier-Journal appeared without a line of editorial.
