A HARMLESS REPTILE.

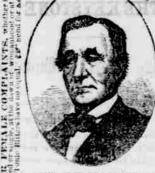

A writer in one of the magazines says : Not only are toads harmless, but they are absolutely and directly useful to us, perambulating our fields and gardens at night, and devouring vast quantities of injurious insects that could never be destroyed by the hand of man. The mode in which a toad makes its prey is very curious The singular beautiful eye of the toad is as quick as it is bright, and if with n range of its vision an insect or a grub should happen to move, the toad is sure to see it, and nearly certain to catch it. i st, the toud holds its head as high as possible, so as to make sure of its prey and then crawls slowly toward it, preferring to get under it if possible -When it is nearly within reach, it gazes intently at the insect, its month being gradually brought nearer and nearer .--Something pink then flashes from its mouth, and the insects vanishes as if by magic.

The pink flash is the tongue of the toad, which is formed in a rather curious way. The base of the tongue is fixed close to the front of the lower jaw, and is long and tapenng, the tip pointing down the throat when it is at rest .--When, however, it is used for catching prey, it is thrown out with a sort of "flick," and the tip, which is covered with a glutinous secretion, adheres to the insect, and conveya it down the toad's throat before the prey has had time to make an effort for escape. When the toad swallows its prey, it does it with a mighty effort, during which the eyes almost disappear, the size of the insect having little to do with the vehemence of the demonstration Sometimes when a large beetle is swallowed it does strug gle, but too late, and for some time its struggles may be seen through the thin and ribless sides of its capturer; the toud sitting the while in perfect composure, not in the least affected by the scratchings and kickings that are going on in its interior.

Indeed, the stomach of the toad seems as devoid of feeling as if it were iron .--Moreover the toad not only cares nothing for the scratcings and kickings of a large boetle, but is equally indifferent to the stings of wasps bees and insects. similarly armed with venomous weapons. and will eat them with marvelous ap petite, as if the sting acted as a sort of gentle aid to digestion. Like cayenne pepper with cucumber
