Treatment.-The first object should e to improve the patient's health, when consequent improvement in a curable ase generally follows. If not herediary, broken wind in horses is generally associated with impaired digestion; it be necessary, therefore, to restore dition in order to remove indigestion, and in this view alterative medicines and matic tonics must be administered. the patient's diet strictly attended . The latter should be the first care of the person in attendance; the food should be in little compass, plenty of ats and little hay, but no chaff. Chaff. is particularly objectionable from the rapidity with which it is devoured, and the stomach thereby distended. Water should be given in moderate quantities, say three times a day, and if he be a foul feeder muzzle at meal time. Green meat is serviceable; carrots are particularly useful. A couple heads of garlic chopped fine and mixed with his food every other day is also beneficial, and moderate exercise in the open air indispensable. While these changes in diet are in progress, the following tonic should be given: Tincture of aromatic sulphuric acid. one drachm, in a pint of water. night and morning; this the horse may be made to drink from the bucket. At the same time the following alterative medicine should be administered: Powdered ginger, gentian, sulphur, salt, cream of tartar, charcoal, liquorice, elecampane caraway seeds and the balm of G.lead buds, chopped fine, equal parts Dose, one ounce every night in the food. So soon as considerable improvement is perceptible, the tonic should be omitted. and the alterative reduced to one-half in quantity; and if his wind continues to improve, discontinue the alterative gradually. Avoid above all things any violent exercise after a hearty meal. If the directions are complied with, the horse will be very slightly troubled with short or broken wind - Turf, Field and

THE CAMEL'S HUMP.

Modern research has determined a curious circumstance of an organic contrivance in the camel and the leech, unlike as they are in structure, functions and habits, which has reference to supplying them with food from storehouses in their own bodies till supplies are attainable from other sources.

The hump is an immense collection of fat stored in reticulated cells piled one upon another, which is concentrated food. When fodder cannot be had, as frequently occurs on their long caravan travels in the desert, a peculiar set of absorbing vessels draws upon the magazine-the hump-earrying the fat into circulation till food from without puts a stop to the draft on the back. The hump is very ensibly diminished at times even being almost completely leveled, but that which was thus borrowed to sustain life tempo- town, Pa. raily is immediately replaced when the stomach is set in motion again in its ac- New Store and New Goods. customed manner.

The medical leech or bloodsucker, low us it is in the organic scale of life, is as carefully provided for in regard to the contingencies of life as the king of the right and left to enter two lateral tubes, instead of entering directly into the stomach.
