Democratic Denunciation and Prophecy.

President Grant for President next Fall. Our Democratic brethren have a limited amount of talk about the Republican office-holders, from post-mortem up, giving their earnest support in favor of President Grant; just as if it were something unusual for such persons to support a President of their own party.

The precedent of the Democratic party itself is in favor of just such a support. The office-holders of every Democratic administration always were a unit in that particular, not excepting the disastrous administration of James Buchanan. The country does not forget the perniciety of the great majority of the office-holders under Buchanan, in upholding him when the people of the North were outspoken against him. It is believed that had a Republican Administration been in power when the Rebellion manifested itself as it did under Mr. Buchanan, and had the Chief Executive pursued the same favorable course toward the Rebels that Mr. Buchanan did, that the nineteen-twentieth of the commissions held by the office-holders would have been sent to him for disposal. This belief almost becomes a powerful conviction in the full light of the fact that when Andrew Johnson became an apostate, that thousands of office holders throughout the North threw up their commissions and would act under his administration. And it is worthy of notice, too, that Democrats were ready and eager to gather up the cast away "loaves and fishes."

Whatever may be said of the eagerness of the office holders to favor the re-nomination and re-election of President Grant to retain a hold of the public "bread and butter," the truth is as plain as the sunlight that on the Presidential question they are in accord with the large body of the Republican party. President Grant is not the nominee of the office holders for the Presidency next fall. He is the nominee of that portion of the party that has not asked for and do not desire political place. He is in the highest favor with such people. The denunciations that the Democrats heap upon him fall like feathers, lightly, and do no harm, for their prophetic declarations in regard to him have all ended in miserable mistakes, and he has been just the opposite of all that they told the world that he would be.

President Grant had scarcely loomed into prominence as a General, when the Democracy opened their fire of denunciation, and declared him a failure. According to their method of calculation he was a failure all through the war, even after he had compelled the Rebels to ground their arms, and to this day they do not see the false prophecy in regard to his generalship. Then they declared that if elected President he would usurp all of the civil power and establish a military despotism. As a President, Grant has proven the unreliability of Democratic prophecy, for no executive before him observed a higher regard for the law.

Santo Domingo came prominently before the public. It put the Democracy all agog. Only a straw, according to their way of thinking, was wanting to break the back of the Republican party. Santo Domingo was the straw. When, lo, to the chagrin of the prophets, President Grant gives the whole question over to the consideration of the people, and the trouble is stilled, and the Democratic prediction goes the way of all preceding ones.

"Then in the eyes of the erring brethren," the Alabama Claims became the rock on which Republicanism is to go pieces. In the management of that vexed question the President exercises the highest statesmanship, and submits the trouble that threatened bloodshed to an arbitration, and the trouble disappears, and the mouths of the prophets are shut.

On the question of Civil Service and Finance Grant would throw into chaotic state the Republican party, if Democratic predictions had been fulfilled; but, alas, for that party, one and all have passed as blasts of the fiftal storm, doing no harm further than to reveal the truth that the Democracy has no policy, and does not even possess the quality to predict the course of the nation in its onward march of progress and reform.

The denunciation of the office holders for supporting Grant is but a puff of idle breath, for office holders and people are alike for Grant. And the denunciation and prediction of failure of every measure pursued by the President have resulted so differently from their expectations that they are now more confounded than ever. So let them remain with their jargon, until next fall, when the Republican party will present Grant as their leader, will meet and defeat them, and give them four more years in which to grovel. We are for President Grant for President next fall.

OUR STATE FISHERIES.

Fish Commissioner Warrall's Report.

Fish Commissioner Warrall has just made his annual report in reference to the condition of the inland fisheries of the State. He considers the season as entirely feasible, and states that he has every reason to anticipate ultimate success. The first experiment tried was the erection of a fish dam in the Susquehanna river at Columbia. This was brought into operation in 1867 and the very first year it was a success, the catch of shad being very respectable. In 1871 the finest Columbia shad were sold in Harrisburg, thirty miles from the factories, at considerable less than one dollar a pair, the catch for that year exceeding one hundred thousand. In support of his theory he further states that in 1867 shad were spawned artificially in the Connecticut river, by Seth Green (the inventor of artificial shad culture) and at the expense of the State, to the extent of two millions, and in the ensuing year the catch exceeded anything as far back as 1802. Thus by a single experiment was the loss in that river made up, which had been increasing annually for over three-score years. The learned Commissioner enumerates some thirty varieties of fish indigenous to Pennsylvania waters, that are good, substantial food, and which, in his opinion, might be rendered plentiful in our rivers by artificial propagation and judicious legal protection.—Press

A NEW YORK correspondent of the Boston Journal gave some very interesting facts concerning the line of defence which will be followed by the counsel of Stokes, the supposed murderer of James Fisk, Jr. We write supposed advisedly for nothing is certain in this world, and although there has not probably been a doubt that Stokes did shoot Fisk to death, the lawyers are going to try to prove, and from appearances will succeed in proving, that he did not. One of the startling positions taken is that Col. Fisk was not only armed, but that the wound in his body was inflicted by himself—inflicted at Valandigham, in attempting to draw his pistol from his pocket. That two pistols were used, the correspondent declares, is very clear, from the fact that two bullets were found, one in Fisk's body and one on the marble pavement, the one bullet fitting the pistol found and the other not—the bullet in the body fitting the pistol found, the bullet on the floor, which produced the wound in the arm, not fitting any pistol yet produced. This is certainly very ingenious, and may cheat the galleys of a victim.

JUBAL EARLY gave expression to his sentiments recently at the Lee Anniversary, at Lexington, Va., as to the sentiments that the Southern people should cherish toward the North. He called upon the ladies whom he addressed, to instill into the minds of the rising generation the memories of the past; upon the students to follow the example of Lee and Stonewall Jackson, and upon the ex-Confederates present to be true to the Lost Cause, and added that if there were any renegades before him they should be sent out branded with infamy. Early and his followers might as well try to roll back the tide of the ocean as to try to roll back the tide of events that set in and engulfed their unjust cause. The world is just commencing to pronounce against slavery, that old and infamous doctrine. Free government has not reached its full estate. The fog does not realize the situation. The cause he mourns is truly a lost cause.

SUPERSTITION IN SUSQUEHANNA COUNTY.

A correspondent writes from Great Bend to the Montrose Republican the following account of a terrible case of superstition and its results gathered from eye-witnesses of the affair: A Mr. Eli Stowe and wife, living in Randolph, some four miles from the Bend (Nazaries), becoming possessed with the idea that the devil had entered their child (a baby only eighteen months old), and that the evil spirit must be conjured by whipping and starving, are said to have tied the helpless infant in a high chair for twenty-three hours ever and anon spanking and whipping it until when discovered it was black and blue from its neck to its heels, and its little quivering flesh so cut and mangled by the lash that the blood actually trickled down the chair to the floor. The alarm was given by the hired man, who hastened to the child's grandparents, a Mr. Kent, living near Windsor village, who on learning the facts, hastened as fast as whip and spur could urge a fleet horse, and on reaching the house of the infatuated parents, actually found the babe undergoing crucifixion at the hands of the father and mother, as above stated. A few hours longer must have ended its sufferings, as the child seemed to be so exhausted as to be nearly insensible. A thrill of horror seemed to pervade that community, and a universal murmur for the law to have its weight. The parents have heretofore been regarded as good citizens, and the cause of this temporary religious insanity is not known.

Harvard College takes good care of the morals of her young men. The college chambermaids are proverbial for their ugliness, and no one is permitted to join the noble army of "goodies" till age has robbed them of what charms they ever had. The consequence is that the most rampant Don Giovanni could not find food for his flame within the precincts shaded by the venerable elms of the university. Eleven editors have spunk from a life of honest poverty to Congress.

Letter from an Old Junatah Democrat.

My Dear Mr. Editor:—The picking up of this month's edition that took all the starch out of our party, and the grand secret saw-words that our big guns have been hammering about adopting what you editors call "The passive policy," but what the folks about the Seven Stars call the passivity, did not set our neighborhood to talking faster than the shooting of Jim Fisk. We haven't got done talking, about him yet. We talked about him as a boy, and some one down at the Stars the other night, said that Jim's pap said that Jim was great on a trade when quite a boy. He said that he believed that if he had been put into a dark room with any other boy and that had they swapped coats a dozen times Jim would have made money every time.

We talked about him as a peddler and some one told how he offered goods to merchants in a certain town at prices lower than they could buy them in the cities, but they would not buy from him, and how he then auctioned out his goods at lower prices than the merchants paid for theirs; and how he returned every few months to the same town and so stocked it and the community with goods that some of the merchants had to quit business.

We talked about him and his cheating operations against the government by supplying blockade runners with goods for the rebels. The rebels are responsible for developing much good and a great deal of bad. Jim was one of the bad things that they brought out. If the rebels had not of kicked up a row, Jim Fisk would yet be driving a peddler wagon, and there would not now be a fellow in jail for murdering him. We talked about his getting into the Erie Railroad as a director, and how he got $50,000 illegal shares of stock issued, and how, when the fraud was about getting him into trouble in New York, he carted the books of the company over to New Jersey where the courts of New York could not reach him, and then waited till the New York Legislature met, and then went and spent among the member a half million of dollars to get the Legislature to legalize the issuing of the $50,000 of stock.

We talked about his sharp work with old Vanderbilt, about his theatres, about his hotel, his horses, and his carriages, and his regiment. But O shades of Andy Jackson, how we talked when we got the part that the woman played, that caused Jim's murder. Some of our fellows talked as if such carryings on between men and women only happened in New York, and really I believe some are so innocent as to hold just that notion—If they do, they're fooled, sure. Nearly every community has its sets that do just such shames, leaving out the murdering part; but not being acquainted much outside of their towns or townships, why of course the matter is not much talked of.

You know the three great things that a man can't get along in this world without are religion, politics, and women.—These are the necessary elements of this world. It couldn't exist a year without them. I don't know which would be missed the quickest. I don't know that Andy Jackson said anything in regard to that score. To the eternal honor of old Andy it cannot be said that he cut any bad shames with women and no man went to greater length than he did to vindicate her honor. He was a church-going member, but you know that he cut off the social intercourse that he had with a favorite preacher and quit going to his church, all on account of a woman. Mrs. Eaton was the woman that was the cause of Andy's religious devotions coming to an end in that particular church. She had been a bright maiden, and was the daughter of a man that kept tavern near Washington. One of them fancy chaps that are always in the Navy fell in love with her. He got awful sick, as young fellows do, and asked her to marry him. She did, and after awhile when he was off sailing in his ship away over near Italy, he shot himself, on purpose. After a respectable season of widowhood the lady was wooed and won by Mr. Eaton who became a member of Andy Jackson's Cabinet, and it was soon circulated about Washington that old Andy was again to have Mrs. Eaton to do the honors of the "White House," and that got up an awful bill of a billow among the fair ladies and gentlemen at Washington. They talked bad things about Mrs. Eaton. They thought that Andy would hear the stories and put her out. He did hear, but he did not mind. They thought that they would have to make their plain, and that he must be told that there was a great feeling against him because of the woman. So they got a preacher that old Andy had a great liking for to tell him all about the matter. The minister told him. Old Andy went for the case straight, and said that he did not believe a word of all that was said. He said that he had known her long, and he had never seen anything wrong in either of her words or actions. He said that Mrs. Jackson in her day had known her, and that she believed Mrs. Eaton a pure woman, and said he, "By the Eternal, you must all have a fair shake. Get all your wits together and let me hear what you know." All of the women's enemies were got together, and a big pow-wow was held over her, and instead of making her seem guilty in Andy's mind, she only seemed purer than ever. He swore that it was only a pack of lies that they had hatched up on account of jealousy and

AN EXCITING COURT CASE.

Shooting all round during the progress of a trial. CHARLESTOWN, W. Va., Jan. 23.—A desperate shooting affray occurred here last evening under the following circumstances: During the war the lands of John Clarkson, a wealthy Virginian, were sold for taxes, and yesterday a suit was commenced to recover property. During the progress of the trial Clarkson called the defendant, U. S. Marshal Stack, a liar. Stack struck Clarkson, and a general melee ensued in which seven shots were fired. The room was small and more than a dozen persons were present. Clarkson was shot four times, and one wound, being in the breast, is dangerous. All the parties are wealthy and respectable, and the affair has caused great excitement.
