BETWEEN LIFE AND DEATH. Seven Persons Plunged Into the Icy Wa-ters of Black Lake.

Cochecton, Sullivan Co., N. Y.,) February 17, 1872.

Thirteen miles east of this place, up mong the pine and hemlock hills of Sullivan county, in the town of Bethel. is Black Lake, one of those small inland named on account of the very dark color process described as follows: lakes for which the county is noted, and of its waters. A tannery is erected here, and scattered here and there in the forest and clearings are the homes of the laborers at the tannery, making quite a settle ment about the lake. There, in that quiet and solitary spot, was witnessed within the past week a scene that struck terror to the stoutest hearts and which ties of courage and endurance which are courageous deeds. The children of some of the employees at the tanuery had gathered at the house of one of them, where they enjoyed themselves untill nearly evening, one day this week. Two little girls, Helen Brooks, daughter of of William C. Brooks, foreman of the tannery, and Hattie Schooumaker, proceeding home the lake, which is frozen over, and was considered safe. When they had reached almost the other shore Hattie broke through the ice, and in trying to help her out Helen slipped in too They both sank, and when they came up, according to James Kilcain, a Rd fifteen years old. who was working a few rods from the shore, they were entwined in each other's arms. Young Kilcain at once started towards the hole in the ice, with the intention of giving the girls all the assistance riet and modest, you'll have it presumed in his power. When he reached them they were struggling to grasp hold of the ice. Kilcain got hold of them, and had them half way out of the water when the ice gave way beneath him, and all three When they came up the lad began shouting for assistance.
