

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

TAKING CARE OF AN ORCHARD. Rev. J. F. Wade, writing to the New York Tribune his experience in bringing up an old orchard, says:

In the winter of '62 I rented a farm near Lockport, New York, that had been rented to various parties for about twenty-five years previous. I will not attempt a description of the condition of the orchard; language would fail in the attempt. Suffice it to say some of the trees were so thick with brush and dead limbs that my little boy would worm his way in and saw out a hole large enough for me to commence operations. I worked every spare hour, trimming, from March till July. I drew on (at a guess) near two hundred loads of barn-yard manure, a part of it at three different dressings, where the trees were most sickly and nearest dead. My landlord severely criticized me for throwing away so much on "that old orchard," instead of keeping it on the fallow. I commenced the last of May, plowed the ground five times that season; first time, very deep, with a common two-horse plow; three times with Hildreth's gang-plow, and harrowed as my better judgment dictated. After a rain, when the bark of the trees was soaked from its effects, I went into the orchard with a hired man and boys (three small ones), with corn knives and hoes, ground sharp. The boys were sent into the trees to scrape the old bark from the limbs out of reach of the hired hand and myself with our hand-hoes. The trees were thoroughly scraped, until, I am sure, the vile insects were deprived of a large share of their harbors. I applied what soft soap I could spare to the trees; but could only give a small share of them a dressing.

Results: In the fall I picked over 200 barrels of winter apples, that an apple buyer in Lockport, who had been in the trade for twenty-five years, pronounced of the most beautiful lot he ever bought. I put in my cellar for winter use about 100 bushels, besides feeding to my hogs about half as many unsalable sweet fall apples as I bared. The orchard contained, as near as I could stop it off, about two acres of ground, and near one third of it was natural fruit and worthless only for cider. When fall came and the leaves in other orchards began to look rare and drop, mine yet looked green and vigorous as in mid-summer and could be seen for miles. The next year I picked 390 barrels of apples from the same orchard, that I sold for $1.94 per barrel after putting up about the same quantity of cider. From repeated trials, I am satisfied farmers might raise from four to ten times the fruit they do, if they would get into the habit of taking one-half the interest and care of the orchard they do of their colts and calves.

I wish I could persuade hundreds of farmers to begin this coming spring to prune, scrape and keep the dirt moving in their orchards, so that the apple moth and all destructive insects would have no quiet or rest in all their coasts. Give up the foolish notion that you must raise a crop in your orchard. Keep your seed in the barn or feed it to your stock—Your orchard needs all the strength of the soil, and liberal feeding besides with manure.

To GROW FRUIT WITHOUT STONES.—An agriculturist says that he grows peaches without stones, by turning the tops of the trees down, cutting off the ends, sticking them into the ground, and fastening them with sticks. In a year or two these tops will take root, when well rooted, cut off the branches, connecting the reserved and rooted branches with the tree proper, and this reserved peach tree will produce fine peaches without stones. The same experiment may be tried with plums, cherries and currants.

THISTLES.—All thistles except the Canada thistle, are biennial; growing from seed one year, and blossoming the next they mature their seed and die.—Remedy: Never let the thistle mature. If all the seed, from your own ground, as well from your neighbor's and the surrounding country, grows treat it thus, and you will be rid of thistles, that is if biennials. If you have the Canada thistles, cut them in June and August, at the time the stock is hollow; if it rains and fills the stock, the root will rot.

A Michigan fruit-grower has undertaken the cultivation of figs, having three hundred trees of that fruit in fine growing condition. He heels them up each winter for protection from the frosts, and owing to his care and judgment has had two crops from them each season for the past two years. Thus far he has made the fig crop a source of considerable profit.

To WASH FLANNEL.—Never rub soap upon it; make a suds by dissolving the soap in warm water; rinse in warm water. Very cold or hot water will shrink flannel. Shake them out several minutes before hanging to dry. Blankets are washed in the same way.

ADOPT farming in your tests or inclinations lead that way. It always was the most respectable of vocations, and the only limit to the development of it and its kindred pursuits, in utility, is the limit of human intelligence.
