TOWN AND COUNTRY.

CARIBBY sells at 10 cents per pound at Sunbury.

Perry county farmers treat the chaps who visit their corn cribs to a dose of fine shot.

Branford county has declared against liquor license to the extent of a 2,250 majority vote.

Republican, Democratic, Liberal and Temperance papers in Pennsylvania are all advocating the Local Option Law.

The Sunbury Democrat says that a new religious sect has been organized in that town. It is styled "The Free Radical Denomination."

J. F. G. Long, of Spruce Hill town ship, offers his services to the citizens of Juniata county as auctioneer and valuer etc. See his card in another column.

J. B. Smith, of Thompsontown, will offer at public sale, at his residence, on Tuesday, March 4, 1873, five work horses, one mare, three colts, four fasters, five cows, eleven head young cat, one sow, nine sheeps, farming implements and household furniture. Sale at 10 o'clock. See land bills.

THOMAS FRANK, the pedestrian of Northumberland County, informs us that he walked one mile, in the snow, on last Friday, served two summons and returned home in one hour and fifty minutes. He still expresses his willingness to walk to Harrisburg and return in twenty four hours, if the people doubt his ability to do so. Sunbury Democrat.

A TEMPERANCE organization have requested that a column in the SENTINEL be devoted to the Temperance cause. The amount of space requested has been set apart to their interest. The organization appointed D. W. Wickesheim, of Chambers, Pa., and Bayard Nicolls, of Conowingo, Pa., as editors of said column. These gentlemen expect to can tribute next week.

Public opinion is rapidly settling to the correct side in the United States. The amount of space requested has been set apart to their interest. The organization appointed D. W. Wickesheim, of Chambers, Pa., and Bayard Nicolls, of Conowingo, Pa., as editors of said column. These gentlemen expect to can tribute next week.

HARRISBURG daily papers, in their report of the proceedings of the State Senate, stated that citizens of this county, through Senator Crawford, had petitioned the Legislature to repeal the law prohibiting the sale of liquor on election days. The reporters of said papers made quite a mistake. No such petitions had been sent from this county. Senator Crawford did not present a petition or petitions of such a character. He did, however, present a petition from citizens of this county asking for a supplement to the act preventing the sale of liquor on election days, and asking that all liquor places be closed twenty-four hours instead of twelve, as the law now requires them to be.

At a temperance meeting in Washington to the other evening Senator Ferry, of Michigan, related an incident in his own personal experience, where he attended a fashionable reception in company with a lady. After being bountifully helped to the viands of the table she requested champagne. Two glasses were poured out by the waiter, and the speaker was asked to join his companion in the sparkling cup. But in this trying moment he had the strength to utter the saving words "I never drink." The result was that little wine was drunk by anybody. This is what is wanted from every one, no matter how humble his sphere, personal example. Remember this, young man when you are asked to drink.—E.C.

THE snow, oh! the beautiful snow, Think of it as you go, For you goods, Comfortable and warm, bright and new, Like the snow-flakes that yesterday flew, All so cheap, that have just on the shelves been heaped, At the KEYSTONE STORE, from the eastern markets, But not from the eastern shores, Don't forget the place, but ever remember That the house is that of TILTEN & ESPENSCHADE, And that there is no use for other men to try to equal Their prices in a DRY GOODS raid.

ON Saturday evening a week one of Pennsylvania trains landed a young man at Altoona named E. C. Hill, who had made a confession in Pittsburgh of a crime perpetrated by him in September, 1866—the burning of several buildings in Altoona. A few days ago Hill was arrested for drunkenness and committed to jail for ten days. Shortly after his imprisonment he requested an interview with a detective, which was granted. As soon as the officer had entered the cell of the prisoner the latter stated that he had an important confession to make of a crime which he had kept secret for six years. The time had come when he could no longer endure the pangs of remorse. During the long interval the crime had haunted him day and night rendering his life a continuous burden unless when under the influence of liquor. He never could forget it except through the aid of drink and in consequence had become a drunkard.

The officer consented to receive any confession he might make, but warned him what the consequence would be. The prisoner said that it was in full view of the consequences that he desired to confess. He was a young man, only twenty-two years of age and if he should now receive his trial and punishment it would probably be his salvation, and when his term of punishment should be ended he might start his career anew and be an honest, upright man. He then related to the officer's mind the fact that in September, 1866, an incendiary fire occurred at Altoona, by which a row of seven new buildings, occupied by stores and some of them having dwellings in the upper portions was burned. There was no suspicion as to who the incendiary was, and a reward for the apprehension and conviction of the criminal was offered. The reward at first was $150, and it was subsequently increased to $500. Hill said that he was the man who set fire to those buildings. He fell in with two men during the day, whom he never saw before. They made themselves very friendly, and induced him to drink repeatedly. He was not an habitual drinker, and they made him drunk. Then they urged him to set fire to those buildings that night, promising to give him fifty dollars if he would do so. Crazy with drink he accepted the offer, and while the two men watched at a distance he applied a match to some stavings which he found under the steps of one of the buildings, and the whole row was soon in flames. While the fire was in progress Hill was lying drunk across the street.

The next morning he saw the two men for a few moments, but they suddenly disappeared, and he never saw or heard of them since and never received any money from them. He remained in Altoona for two or three days, until the reward was offered for the incendiary and then, though there was evidently not the slightest suspicion against him, he fled. Since then he has rambled far and wide, most of the time traveling with different circus companies. He has been attached to Barnum's and to Forepaugh's among others. Always, he said, he kept as far from Altoona as possible, and it he chanced to see any one from that place his heart would jump so that it almost killed him. Much of the time he has been in Connecticut.

He came to Pittsburgh from Chicago a few weeks ago but did not work, and drank constantly, as he had done ever since the crime, to drown the recollection of it. While in Chicago he said he was on the point of confessing to the authorities there but could not quite make up his mind to do it. Now, however, he could not restrain the confession any longer, and so told his story as stated. He always lived in Altoona and was formerly a railroad employee there. He lost his right leg on the railroad there some time before the fire. Some of relatives reside at Altoona now, but both his parents are dead. If he can only keep from seeing anybody from Altoona after his sentence is served he feels that he can be well contented.—Pittsburgh Paper.

THE snow, oh! the beautiful snow, Think of it as you go, For you goods, Comfortable and warm, bright and new, Like the snow-flakes that yesterday flew, All so cheap, that have just on the shelves been heaped, At the KEYSTONE STORE, from the eastern markets, But not from the eastern shores, Don't forget the place, but ever remember That the house is that of TILTEN & ESPENSCHADE, And that there is no use for other men to try to equal Their prices in a DRY GOODS raid.

THE Hollidaysburg Register says: Some days ago, a Huntingdon man named Geo. A. Mitchell, accused a Baltimorean named J. J. Greer, whilst traveling on the railroad together with stealing seventy dollars from his watch fob. He was arrested at Altoona, and whilst the officers were about to search Greer, he insisted that Mitchell be first searched, when the supposed stolen money was found wrapped up in his inside coat-pocket, and an additional five dollars besides. It is thought that, fearing the consequences, he slipped the money into the pocket of Mitchell, who was intoxicated, and along with it the extra five dollars. Mitchell paid the costs and had a surplus left out of the five dollars—and there the matter ended.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER, IS WEALTH, IS HAPPINESS.—The truth of which can be tested by calling at the Dental Office of G. L. DERR, established in Millintown in 1860, and has been in successful operation ever since, (as the public can attest). If you have toothache, it is the place to go, and have it stopped in five minutes, without pain, and without extracting, and at the same time can have said organ preserved for usefulness for life. It is also the place to go if you have scurvy gums, and $50.00 will be paid in every case of failure to cure. It is the place to go if you want the most beautiful sets of Porcelain Teeth and Gums, mounted upon Rubber or any of the various bases now in general use, and at prices to suit all. Teeth filled and built up with fine Gold, warranted to last for life. Teeth repaired. Old sets artificial teeth exchanged for new, or re-moulded—warranted to give perfect satisfaction. I purpose giving my particular attention to the preservation of the Natural Teeth. It is to be lamented that on the part of the people the disposition is to submit to the loss of the natural teeth (which, if attended to, might be saved) for artificial teeth, which at best are only substitutes; thus causing as a direct result, what many are not aware of, a shortening of the lives of the individuals themselves, and also entailing on the coming generation an imperfect organization. If persons would have their teeth examined once a year, and then have them attended to in time by a competent Dentist, they would never know what toothache or neuralgia was, and would preserve their teeth and also their health.

G. L. DERR, Practical Dentist.
