Tobacco—Its Effects on the Human Constitution, Physical, Intellectual and Moral.

BY JAMES COULTER LAYARD, M. D. [CONTINUED] DYSPEPSIA.

When we witness the astonishing amount of saliva poured out by inveterate tobacco chewers and smokers, we need not wonder that so many of them have dyspepsia. The salivary fluid is one of the necessary secretions required for the digestion of our food. By some physiologists it is considered just as essential as the gastric juice. It is a most powerful agent, the active principle of which, when diluted to the proper degree to bring it into contact with every part, some chemists say, is capable of dissolving a thousand times its own weight of any nutriment that is appropriate to the system. To supply the enormous quantity wasted by the tobacco user, the salivary glands are taxed to their utmost capacity, almost worked to death; and then are only able to furnish a fluid deteriorated in quality, and vitiated saline must impair digestion. Dr. Good gives it as his opinion that great evil results from the conveyance to the stomach of tobacco which is mixed with the saliva. Dr. Cullen says he has found all the symptoms of dyspepsia produced by snuffing, particularly pains of the stomach, occurring every day. He felt certain that he did not mistake the cause of these from the fact that from the sudden interruption of snuffing for some days the pains ceased, but upon the return of the patient to the habit, the pains also returned. Dr. Clay, of Manchester, England, says it is the sole cause of a species of dyspepsia, which he has witnessed in a number of cases, the symptoms being a painful sensation of weight at the stomach, as of some hard, indigestible substance pressing upon a tender part.

CANCER.

Dr. Warren, of Boston, says it is a rare thing indeed to find cancer of the tongue, tongue and lips in any but a user of tobacco. He has, in a practice of more than twenty years, particularly noticed this; he has also noticed that when one side only was affected, it was that on which the tobacco, the cigar, or the pipe was habitually retained in contact with the part. Dr. Eliak Harris, one of the physicians of the New York Dispensary, says that of six cases of cancer that have been under his care within two years, five were those of men who used tobacco. Dr. Cullen, an eminent London surgeon, and author of a work on surgery, testifies substantially to the same general facts. It may be said that cancer is a constitutional disease, that it exists in the blood, and that the ulcer is but its local expression; and that, moreover, if the predisposition did not exist, no amount of smoking or chewing would ever produce a cancerous ulcer. Granting all this, the predisposition might exist for years, perhaps for a lifetime, or until Nature, through some of the emanations of the system or by a critical action of some kind, should find means of removing the poison from the blood, in a way less disagreeable and less painful to the patients than through an ulcerous sore on the face, which is seldom or never healed. But when a man puts a quid of tobacco or a cigar into his mouth, Nature directs all her energies to that point, a cancerous ulcer is the result, and in a majority of cases, all hope of a cure is at an end.

Thus we see that the use of tobacco—first, originates various diseases; secondly, it aggravates those which owe their origin to other causes; thirdly, it precipitates the development of those to which a predisposition exists, and which but for its use might have slumbered. And, besides this, Dr. John King, of Cincinnati, asserts that the systems of chronic invalids who use tobacco are by its use rendered, to a great degree, unresponsive to the action of the various remedies employed for their cure. Dr. Willard Parker, of New York, says that although tobacco users appear to be as strong as other persons, yet when attacked by disease they are found to have less constitutional stamina, and are able to oppose but a feeble resistance to its onset; while from wounds or injuries of any kind they recover with difficulty, if at all, while other persons get well speedily. Moreover, Dr. Parker says that in his practice he has never yet found an employee in a tobacco factory who was perfectly sound and healthy.

An Altoona Heroine.

A ROMANCE OF LOVE.

From the Wilmington, (Del.) Commercial of the 11th inst., we copy the following, the heroine of which, it will be seen is a resident of our up-railroad neighbor, Altoona:

It seems that a well-to-do farmer, by the name of M—, living near Altoona, Pa., has three handsome and accomplished daughters, aged respectively 17, 20 and 23, the two eldest being the heroines of our story. Miss M., the elder was blest with a Wilmington lover, who was in every way acceptable to the fond parents, and in a short time it was said that both were to be made "one." Miss M., the younger of the two (and it is said, the handsomer) also had a lover, who resided near her own home, among the grand defiles of the Alleghenies, but not so acceptable to the "old folk" as the suitor for the hand and heart of her sister.

AN AWFUL LONESOME MAN IN CALIFORNIA.

In the chancy, which, in California's early days, did duty as office for the banking, postal and express of Wells, Fargo & Co., in Marysville, there sat, one Saturday evening, a misanthropic and dejected looking individual, whose long and unkempt hair and beard, cowhide boots and rough dress bespoke the miner. For over an hour he sat there picture of despair, with not a word or a look from any one present. Miners came, left their "dust," took their coin in return, and exchanged greetings with all present, save the one morose man whose apathy nothing, it seemed, could disturb. Finally there entered a young miner with a beaming face, who, after completing his business at the counter, turned to the agent in charge and remarked that on the previous Saturday he had some dealings with the bank, and thought that some mistake had been made in his account. "Guess not," said the agent. "Our cash was all right and I reckon we keep our books pretty straight."

But upon the request of the miner that the account should be examined, the account was looked at, and it was found that through a clerical error, the miner had paid just $50 too much. "That's just what I make it," said the latter; "and here's your money." With this he threw down the gold, and received the thanks of the agent.

While this conversation was in progress, the misanthropic miner had preserved his look of utter indifference; but, when he saw the money actually returned, his face brightened up, he rose slowly, walked toward the honest miner with slow and solemn step, and said: "Young man, don't you feel awful lonesome in this country?"

A SEARCHER after truth writes to ask us which is grammatically correct, to say "the house is building" or "the house is being built;" "the street is being paved?" There is a wide diversity of opinion upon this subject; but we are inclined to favor "is being built," for the following reason: Suppose you want to express another kind of an idea, would you say for instance "John is spanking" or "John is being spanked?" The difference to you may seem immaterial, but it is a matter of considerable importance to Jonny; and it is probable that if any choice were given him, he would select the former alternative. You assert, we say, that "Hannah is hugging," which by the way would be a very improper thing for Hannah to do, it would be positively scandalous, indeed. Precisely a similar idea is conveyed if you say "Hannah is being hugged," because it is the peculiarity of the act that is hardly ever one-sided; there is no selfishness about it. And it is the same with kissing. "Jane is kissing," is just exactly as we should say, "Jane is being kissed; and the sensation is the same.

JONES and his wife were always quarreling about their comparative talent for keeping a fire. She always insisted that the sticks with the tongs he put the fire out. One night the church bell sounded the alarm, and Jones sprang for his fire bucket, eager to rush to the conflagration. "Mr. Jones," cried his wife as he reached the door, "Mr. Jones, take the tongs!"

Here is the last of a shoemaker, beyond which let no cobbler go: A lady complaining that the soles of her shoes were too thick, the careful manufacturer said to her: Is that the only objection to them, madame? "It is," replied the lady, "Well then, madame, if you take them I think I can assure you, you will find that objection gradually wear away."

Temperance Column.

D. W. WICKERHAM, Editor.

Go, Fool What I Have Felt.

(By a young lady who was told that she was a monomaniac in her hatred of alcoholic liquors.)

Go, feel what I have felt, Go, bear what I have borne; Sink 'neath a bl. w. father's debt, And the cold, proud world's scorn. Thus struggle on from year to year, Thy sole relief the scalding tear.

Go, weep as I have wept, O'er a loved father's fall; See every cherished promise swept, Youth's sweetness turned to gall; Hope's faded flowers scrawled all the way, That led me up to woman's day.

Go, kneel as I have knelt; Implore, beseech and pray, Scrive the heaviest heart to melt The downward course to stay; Be cast with bitter curses aside— Thy prayers barbaqued, thy tears defied.

Go, stand where I have stood, And see the strong man bow; With gnashing teeth, lips lashed in blood, And cold and livid brow; Go, catch his wandering glance, and see There mirrored his soul's misery.

Go, hear what I have heard, The sob's of sad despair, As memory's footing founts hath stirred, And his recollings there; Have told him what he might have been, Had he the drunkard's fate foreseen.

Go to my mother's side, And her crushed spirit cheer; Thine own deep anguish hide, Wipe from the cheek the tear; Wipe the dimmed eye, her farrowed brow, The grey that streaks her now.

The toll-woman frame, the trembling limb, And trace the ruin back to him Whose glittered faith, in early youth, Promised eternal love and truth, But who, forsworn, hath yielded up This promise to the deadly snuff.

And led her down from love and light, And all that made her pathway bright, And chained her there amid woe and strife, That lovely thing—a drunkard's wife; And stamped on childhood's brow, so mild, That winking blight, a drunkard's child!

Go, hear, and see and feel, and know All that my soul hath felt and known, Then look within the wine-cup's glow; See if its brightness can atone; Think if thy favor you would try, If all proclaimed—'To drink and die.

Tell me I hate the bowl!— Hate is a feeble word, I loathe abhor, my very soul By strong disgust is stirred, When'er I see, or hear or tell Of the OXAR, ARCADE OF HELL.

Communication.

I am thankful that there is an influence so potent for good as this column in the Sentinel, sounding the alarm in the ears of the people, especially the young. God grant that the principles which it advocates may advance from triumph to triumph until the whole land shall own their way.

Do not the tens of thousands of drunkards, reeling on the highways of despair, crime and death, implore us to gird on the armor of a true patriot; and help them to charge straight on the strongholds of the devil, and drive back his legions which carry away to destruction so many of our best citizens?

I am fully convinced that if every good citizen, every moral man, every Christian, were to stop and take one thoughtful look on the picture, which facts present all over this broad land, he would not doubt one moment as to where he should be found, and in whose ranks doing service for his country. Could he see the thousands of our young men who go annually to drunkard's graves through the allurements of the licensed dram shops; could he see the broken-hearted wronged and degraded wife, the sorrowing mother or sister, mourning the loved and lost; the poor friendless orphan calling in vain for that protection he so much needs, but of which the demon drink has robbed him; could he witness the crime the murders, the reports of which almost daily stain our ears, and committed under the influence of strong drink, I believe all doubts, if he had any, as to how he should vote in March would vanish.

To every man who has the interest of the community at heart, who loves law and order; to every Christian man who glories in the triumph of God's kingdom on this earth and longs for the prevalence and dominion of a "peace on earth and good will toward men," which shall know none of the sorrow, the sins, the stripes and the lashes, with which the com mercies in ardent spirits embue the souls of men, we appeal; and shall we appeal in vain?

Should the temperance flash the intelligence that an enemy was on the border, carrying devastation in his path and calling on us for aid to repel the destroyer, how quickly would the patriotic impulses of every Pennsylvanian, who loves the honor of the State, send him to the front to drive back the foe. But to-day, an invader more to be dreaded than the trained battalions of Lee or Morgan, has not only passed the borders, but is entrenched and defiant in almost every township, village and city of our broad Commonwealth, and it is devoting to fearful captivity and death, great numbers of our best men. If I speak the truth, where and with whom shall we be found fighting on the 21st day of March? I ask thoughtful men, where?

Let every voter ponder well and we do not fear the answer.

A PLEASANT little instance of luxurious paperiness is furnished by a family in Norwalk, Conn. It consists of five persons, who together spend $8.50 per week for opium, and apply to the town authorities for coal and bread and butter!

Nothing more excites to everything noble and generous, than virtuous love.
