At an informal meeting, this evening, of the foremen, trackmen, and other employees of the P. R. R. at this point—Foreman M. L. Heller presiding, Agent W. W. Fuller, acting secretary, and T. Reynolds treasurer...

success of this great corporation was not that of its chief officers alone. The industry and integrity of the subordinate officers, and the patient labor and vigilance of its employees, even down to those who occupy the least conspicuous positions, have all contributed to these grand results...

And, sir, while to your ability, integrity and vigilance, is mainly due the good condition of the division of the railroad of which you have charge, and while these qualities commend you to your superiors and win the admiration of your subordinates, and of the community, yet this gift is tendered you by the foremen, more because of your uniform courtesy and kindness to them in your official character than for any other reasons...

The contributors to this testimonial embrace persons occupying almost every position under your supervision—the watchmen who turn the midnight oil, not as the student in his search through dusty tomes for hidden lore, but in the more directly responsible act of affording safe transit to the many heavily laden trains passing over this magnificent iron highway...

And, sir, it should be doubly gratifying to you to remember that the movement for the purchase of this costly gift was first inaugurated at your old home, where, from a comparatively obscure position you were raised by your merits alone to the responsible place which you now hold...

Receive then this watch, and carry it as a memento of the respect and confidence of the donors. May it serve you as a time keeper as faithfully as you have served this company, and when at last you are called off from your earthly labors, by the fiat of the Grand Master above, may it descend as a prized heirloom to your children, and be to them a sacred talisman, inducing them to emulate the example which, in your honorable and successful career, you have set before them.

liance, combined with an indomitable will can laugh to scorn the difficulties and dangers that beset his path-way, and will succeed in the face of any opposition that may confront him.

This, my young friends, is the example I would set before you—the model I would offer for your imitation. You give a watch. We accept it. Our friend shall bear it with him. And from it may we all learn the great virtue of punctuality. "The politeness of Kings" It is the talismanic word of success.

After the presentation was ended the company withdrew to the diningroom of the Patterson House and partook of the edibles of the sumptuously laden tables spread by Mr. Hays the popular keeper of the Hotel.

At the instance of the employees of your division I address you for the purpose of tendering to you a testimonial of their esteem and kindly consideration for you. The duty is to me an agreeable one. Modest merit deserves recognition everywhere, and as it has been your habit, in the responsible position which you occupy to value your subordinates according to their respective merits, so they in turn, acknowledging the rule as a just one, desire through me to present you with a token of their esteem, and to say to you that it is given because of your merit alone.

Persons who order trees from their nursery, receive them fresh from the ground, get them cheaper, and will have the satisfaction of knowing that they are patronizing a home enterprise. Address, BRUBAKER & PAGE, Oakland Mills, Juniata Co. Pa. May 28-31.

And what is the secret of the prosperity of this Pennsylvania Railroad? Is it a mere accident? Any one will tell you that this company has struggled through many difficulties; that it has encountered and successfully resisted powerful opposition and competition, backed by enormous capital, both upon the north and upon the south, and its prosperity cannot be the result of accident.
