Thus far, however, this system of warfare has signally failed, because the people are too intelligent to trust the destiny of the country in the hands of those who have, in great part, been unreliable in the late war, and who seem not to have the intelligence to perceive suitable remedies for existing ills.

We have ever held that all political parties are simply means to secure certain ends; and in giving our preference to one party over the other, we must consider not merely whether one of the existing parties is, by the elements of its constitution, by its past history and tradition, and its general tendency, willing to take up our cause, but also whether it has the power to secure it by adequate legislation.
