The chandelier in the Presbyterian church at Pine Grove, Centre county, fell a few evenings ago, just as the minister was giving out the hymn. The oil in the lamps immediately took fire. The greatest confusion ensued. Miss Goheen, Rock Springs, extinguished the fire by smothering it with her shaw! Who Miss Goheen is we do not know, but we venture to say that she is a girl whose acquaintance and friendship is worth forming.

The liquor drinkers and sellers employ all of the ways and means they know of to evade the Local Option law, the former to gratify his appetite for strong drink, the latter to gratify his avarice. The Altooca Tribune speaks of the manner of evading the law in that town. It says the liquor drinkers have organized clubs and conduct their business as follows: The clubs or associations have each "a constitution and by laws end a regularly elected president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, and other officers. It meets semi-weekly or weekly. One of the provisions of the constitution is that no member shall be al-lowed to partake of any spiritnous, malt, or vinous liquor under a penalty of ten cents for each and every offense so committed. Each member is required to keep an accurate account of times he is guilty of infraction of this rule, and at the meet ing of the association, must pay over the sum total of his fines to the treasurer.— This official, from time to time as the demands of the association may seem to require, invests the accrued proceeds in the purchase of another barrel of whiskey or another invoice of beer, and then the play goes on as before. It will be observed by the plan here imperfectly outlined that no liquor is actually sold, the revenue to keep up the supply being realized by the sys-tem of fines provided for in the constitution. The amount of each fine, it will further be noticed, is precisely the cost of fellow, some 14 years of age, who

It seems that the prosecutor, Knisely, in the course of events, coaxed away one of Mr. Dean's journeymen and helped him surreptitiously to remove his "kit" after night, while said jour was in debt to Mr. D. This fanned the smouldering fire into a bright and lambent flame, and, of course, mutual recriminations were the order of the day. The defendant and prosecutor happening to meet on the street, vis a vis. angry words were indulged in, accompanied, doubtless, with threats of personal chastisement on both sides. There was quite a large crowd in atendance at Court up until Thursday evening, the Court House, at times, especially in the evening, being crowded. Better order inside and out of the Court House was manifest among those in attendance than formerly. Some few behaved as usual, but as no liquor is sold now, the local option law being strictly observed, they must have eaten something that disagreed with their stomachs, or perhaps made a mistake and drank too much river water.
