The Priends that Love Me Best. Would I were in my native vale, Where softly sighs the summer gale, Where flowers of every varied dye. That charm the sense and please the eye Are scattered, with unsparing hand, To shed their fragrance through the land; Where rippling streams their murmurs lend, With Nature's harmony to blend-And what is far beyond the rest, Where dwell the friends that love me best. They tell me of the smiling main, That lies beyond Columbia's plain; They talk of Persia's rosy flowers. Of fair Italia's groves and bowers, Of Gant's remantic vine clad hills And wild Helvetia's sparkling rills-But wherefore should I thither roam. When I have brighter scenes at home. And what's far dearer than the rest. Where dwell the friends that love me best An exile speaks, an exile sighs, An exile's tears are in his eves. Whose parching sockets speak of rest, As strange, unknown within his breast Yet, like that sun whose silvered rays He daily hides beneath the west, .Till morning peeps-Ill hush my lays Till with the friends that love me best.
