Mr. Biddle does not seem disposed to wear his honors meekly, or to abate a jot of his importance. Having succeeded, by the sheer force of a little act, much impudence and downright bullying, in securing the nomination of Gen. Irvin, and, as a consequence, thrusting himself into the position of organ of the whig party in this city, he betrays his natural intolerance and domineering disposition, by abusing and trampling upon his less scrupulates comperes, whom he had already foiled, baffled and mortified. Mr. Hampton and his friends, who were in reality the exponents of the wishes of the better, if not the larger, portion of the whig party, have been made the subject of his mass action of the convention.
