Woung, pure, and gentle, ttill are near To shield us from the envenom'd darts Of foes, and our afflictions share;— Hearts that would e'en with us divide Hearts that would even with us divide.
The wital stream of joy that flows
So fall in them; hearts that would hide.
Another's faults, soothe others' woes;
And, feeling all the love of Heaven—
That love which purgeth us from sin—
While they would be themselves forgiven,
Are pure and spotless, all within.
The thus my thoughts revert to thee,
Even in my darkest, drearest hour;—
Thy find regard and music. Thy food regard and purity,
Oft gives my sinking spirit power
To bear its load of care and grief—

(Such the effect of sympathy)— For, struggling on, I find relief In knowing that it is shared by thee. Of be then eyer thus so dear,
So faithful, and so true a friend; Still, for my woes, drop thou a toar;
And, when my troubled life shall end,
Thy name shall pass the gates of bliss,
As spirit of celestial birth Seeking a brighter world than this,
Though peaceful sejourning on earth.
For thee, while here, my feeble prayer
Shall rise to Heaven's eternal throne-

That thou its choicest blessings share, Until I AM makes thee His own.
