Mr. Clay's Speech—No. 5

Having disposed of Mr. Clay's views on the points involved in the war itself, and defined the position of the leading members of the Whig party, and that of the Whig press, we come now to consider his proposition, namely, that the power of Congress over a war, when once in existence, his assertions are, that the objects of the war had not been declared by the act of Congress...

In what respect, then, can our national character be made to suffer, in the eyes of any man, or of any nation, who recognizes our laws as aiming at justice? None, we think, but one determined to try and place his own country in the wrong, by acquiescing in the wrong of his friends...

And what good end are we to attain, by taking the position, which many of the friends of Mr. Clay so positively assert should be taken? Even if we were sure that Mexico would be benefited by our leaving her, by the intestine broils which would ensue, and which would be the result of our withdrawal from her...
