We know the only power that, being continually exercised, to be true the statement made by that gentleman, can give happiness to mankind. It is the creator, that the honest and intelligent operative, in the slave cording to its will. It is, therefore, in every popuany other part of our country: and as it respects lar government, the sovereign power; and of right ought to rule over, direct, and control all other powers. Every enactment which places restrictions upon this power, every usage of society that exactions its degradation, every institution that is calculated to lessen the intelligent operative in the estimation of his fellow men, is repugnant to the genius and spirit of our government, and therefore These are truths which almost every man in our country will assent to; and yet how widely different are the views of intelligent men, in relation to the means most proper to be adopted, to ensure their permanent ascendancy-how singularly erroneous have proved many of the plans professedly adopted to promote their establishment. It seems to have been forgotten by many, that capital, of itself, is capable of exerting an influence, in many cases, paramount to all others; and that, therefore, the organization of capital needs not any legal protectionthat the possessor of money is ever able to protect himself, so far as it respects all the operations into which money enters; while labor, no matter to what degree of intelligence it may be allied, if united also to poverty, is sure to be undervalued by the capitalist, and inadequately rewarded, with a view solely to his own benefit; and is, of necessity, less able to

Thus, at once, is the order of nature perverted; and MIND, the immortal mind of man, becomes subservient to money: all his wants are estimated by a being, perhaps in every respect his inhese confined to his absolute necessities; and these again must be supplied at the highest rate of profit to other capitalists, who are jointly leagued with his employers. His independence must be sacrificed; he must not think otherwise than his employers think; or, if he should venture to lo this, he must dare not to act as he thinks, and vote contrary to what they declare are their interests .-Thinking and acting otherwise, he is liable to be a once deprived of employment; and suffer, himself and his family, the penalty of daring to be a free man, in a professedly free country. Let it not be said that these are unjust inferences, drawn from false premises. Would to Heaven that they were. But the history of the world proves to us that the premises are based in truth, and that no other complusion is justly deducible from them: and, other complusion is justly deducible from them: and, to render conviction more palpable, facts, of the conviction more palpable, facts, of Let it not be said that these are unjust inferences, hundreds of operatives have been forced to feel, even in our country, the effect of honest expressions of their opinions, when in conflict with their em-

If it is a peculiar char acteristic of any part of our country, that part is the region in which may be found our most wealthy manufacturing companies; and where chartered privileges are most unsparingly conferred. We recognise in no man a right to arrogate power: and, as a general fact, we have seen that those only who are least worthy of it, seek to exercise power over their fellow men. But we are also convinced, that there are those in our own country, who are incapable of governing and controlling themselves; and we should be far from entrusting to these the government of others. When they shall have attained to a higher degree of intellectual capacity -when they shall have become the equals of the Anglo-Saxon race, we shall not object to sharing with them all the privileges of government, and asserting and defending their mental, and their right o political equality. has taken place between Mr. Clay and General Taylor; and the New York Herald, a few days since, attempted to give the substance of it, in which Mr. Clay figured as having lectured Gen. Taylor on the impropriety of allowing his name to go before the National Whig Convention. The New York True Sun, however, gives the fullowing more likely version of this correspondence:—

"It now appears that Gen. Taylor wrote to Mr. Clay, assuring the latter, that if nominated by the Whig Convention, no man would give him (Mr. C.) more ardent support. This pledge was given in connection with protestations of indisposition to be himself a candidate, and thus interfere with Mr. Clay's election. * Ten to one, the letter from the General to Mr. Clay will soon see the light. Indeed, it is even now probably on the way from Ashland to Washington, from whence it is expected to be made public very shortly."

LATRAGY of a letter, dated Heniaville, May 8, 1748.

L. Mr. John D. Morgan: Dear Sir.—I have sold six dozen of your invaluable Cough Syrup, in this place, and have never known it in any one instance to fail in effecting a permanent cure, but irequently find that one fourth of a bottle will effect a cure on those who have severe coughs. I have been out of the Syrup for some time, and truly believe I could have, sold six dozen more, if I had had it. I will always try and keep a good supply on hand, as no other Cough Syrup will sell since yours has been introduced here.
