This unexpected gift removed one difficulty from the way; but how to leave his mother and his amiable schoolmate, he knew not. He loved his mother, and he loved Lucretia Bentley. The latter passion he found identifying itself with his being; he loved Lucretia, but he never dreamed of winning her; the frowning countenance of her father destroyed the idea whenever it erose in his mind. His mother urged his departure, from two reasons: She saw her son's fondness ditention at an early day. for Miss Bentley, and she well knew if it ripened, and reached that degree of love which would cause him to aspire to her hand, her father would scorn him, and drive him, like a menial, from his house; and she thought a separation was requisite for her son's peace;—and she had the same feelings with Edgar towards the sordid disposition of her son-in-law. So it was concluded that Edgar should go to some academy away from home. Edgar well knew that the money placed in his tents of the wagon or value of the pods, and hence hands was the fruit of much toil and self denial; the duty was very unjust and unequal and how to spend it to the best advantage in securing the object for which lit was saved, caused advacated by the leaders of the whig party through and mineral resources of the valley, the work has been advantaged by the leaders of the whig party through and mineral resources of the valley, the work has been advantaged by them the specific system on the country, and called by them the specific system of the valley, the work has been advantaged in popularity i iderable ralenlation. Tais was quite an unexpected, although a playful sally, to Edgar, and it almost overthrew his ination. But after a moment's reflection; all was again firm in his mind, and he replied: "Yes, Lucretia, I am going away; my feelings, and I imagine, my duty, requires me to leave the place and company in which I have spent so many happy days. So it was with Edgar Stanley, at this time: While he was toiling on his mind was busily engaged; at one time, he was rambling over hill and dale with Lucretia—at another, he was solving a difficult sum for her; but for the most part, he found himself paraphrasing her last words to him. And now it was, that he found how deeply he loved her. "What a fool I am," he sollioquised, "to love the daughter of that rich another, it was to save my neck from the gallance of that save to the small end paraphrasing and Philadelphia. Armijo's Tariff System. In his Reconnoissance in New Mexico, Major Em-ERY gives the following account of the method adopted by Armijo, the Mexican Control, to raise revenue.

It is evident, from this extract, that Armijo had derived his ideas of political economy from the whige of the United States. The rule adopted by world's goods; and for the sake of pleasure, more able, or cheap and indifferent. Like Armijo, the than: profit, he conducted a small seminary, for whige are in favor of laying the same duty upon all the purpose of giving instruction to a few indigent articles of the same name, it matters not what may have been the original cost of such articles. For instance, all cloths, whether the original cost was $1,00 or $10,00 per yard, would have the same specific duty placed on them by the whigs. All boots and shoes, whether costing 50 cents or $5,00 the pair, would be listed in like manner. The plain, inevitable effect of this system is, that the poores

No chaualty has occured, to create any unusual line upon the resources of the Company. The mount expended for ordinary repairs, constitutes a very trifling item in the expense account. The adlitional Lock, at Dam No. 1, has been completed. The report very highly compliments Messrs. Alston and Hannays, the contractors, for their skill in this vork. No intercuption to trade has occurred during he past year. The fears of ice apon the pools have een dissipated. The amount of tolls received during the past year, as shown by the Report of the reasurer, is $56,623,93, being an excess of $2-362,03 over the receipts of the preceding year. The nett income arising from the works during the past year, after the payment of expenses and repairs, amounts to $44,224. We give below an abstract of the Report of the Treasurer :-"It will be perceived by reference to the annexed Report of the Treasurer, that the entire cost of the Damages paid...
