THE INSOLENCE OF CAPITAL.

There seems to be a pretty well-organized effort among the manufacturers of Pittsburgh, with a few rare and honorable exceptions, to put down the Morning Post, of that city, which paper has offended who insisted upon that law being carried into effect. The manufacturers refused to be bound by its provinces, and it is notorious everywhere that when the noor workmen, work-women, work-boys, and the propaid, if sent by a British packet, 5 cents the land of Great Britain, there must be prepaid, if sent by a British packet, 5 cents with the single rate, and if by an American packet 21 Rangerty Ellen the casement over Juan's pallid brow, and over the mild timid face of Coyolls, while the visage of the Stranger, was in shadow. The manufacturers refused to be bound by its profits, turned out to sustain it, they were at the poor workmen, work-women, work-boys, and work-girls, turned out to sustain it, they were at the laboring masses, and the manufacturers have docreed that it must be crushed. But let our fearless brother hold up his head and defy them! "Thrice armed is he who has his quarrel just." The arrogance of wealth too often overleaps all bounds, and forgets the danger of oppressing those upon whom it depends for its profits and its prosperity. As the Past forcibly says:

"At least two-thirds of the citizens of Pittsburgh are working-men, who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. They produce the wealth—they build the city. They are the bulwarks of its strongth and greatness. What would capital be, without their ployers would grind down them and their defenders, how natural if they exclaimed, with the great poet, to in bitterness and anguish:
