From the Saturday PATHIOTIC HOPE. BY JOHN K. HOLMES.

O, that the seer's prophetic ken, Some night might steal to me, And point me from this race of men To that which is to be, And show me if my country's fame Will shine as it bath shore Since Freedom blessed her cherish'd name, And wrote it as her own.

I love to hall my soul to rest 3 With thoughts that she will rise, To be in averything the heat That bere, by fiver, and by lake, From hills and Ocean's shore, Her some in prodict hope shall wake, And strive to love, her more That this is but a sickly ray: In which her might appears, To that which her might appears, Shall burst in coming years-And lips that breaches ber yet, And lips that breache ber breach. Will be forgot, as we lorget, The silent sons of death ;

Then ever also hain stood, As tranquil as the Orient star, And great as she is good ! [Pimburgh, 1849.
