may25 First, between Wood and Market six. This was an interesting case. The Plaintiff sued to recover the first instalment of a Bond dated in October, 1845. The Executor denied the execution of the Bond. The Plaintiff endeavored to prove by a witness, that the Bond was executed by Davison at the house of Dr. Gilliam, sometime in October, 1845, but could fix no preuise day. The Executor endeavored to rebut this by showing that the health of Davison was so infirm during the month, that he could not have written the signature affised to the Bondthat his right arm was paralyzed, and finally that he was not at the house of Dr. Gilliam during the entire month. Owing to the nature of the case, the defence consisted mostly of circumstantial evidence.
