The Second Washington. One of the thirty tyrants of Athens, says the Lonisiana Courter, ordered a citizen to be put to death for saying that the tyrant was neither so valiant as THEMICTOCLES, nor as virtuous as Anistipes. This fellow aspired to the title of a second THEMISTOCLES, or a second Anteriors, and he held in his hands the power of life and death. In these times a man may not be put to death for doubting the virtue or wisdom of a chief magistrate-but there are modes of pualshment other than that of death. Only let a man in office say that another man is not worthy to be called a "Second Washington," and forthwith he will be pugished, not by death, but by being depriyed of the means of living; and the manner in which the punishment is inflicted never was dreamed of by the Athenian tyrants. "The Bradford Reporter and Will kesbarre Far-
