THE SPIRIT LAND. BY JOHN E. HOLMES. n not often of the Angels! dwelling When round us here, words of kindness are forever swell

For the Morning Post

And peace is near-When in the twilight of a dim existence Our sorrows stand,

Yet send no echo from the dreamy distance Of strange command.

When all is glowing as a Summer's morning, As sweet to view; the Bottom, First Ward.

And stars of loveliness the skies adorning Raise hopes anew-

When not a link within the chain is broken That makes us one, -And all our anguish is as yet unspoken,

No ill begun. But when the herald of a dark to-morrow

Around us starts-Or else some messenger all pale with sorro

Disturbs our hearts-When trust has given us its benediction With solemn breath.

And through the chambers of our dark aff We hear of death-

Ah I then we wonder when the spirit' parted With change and day, To what bright region of the skies it started To dwell for ave !

And when the shadows of the eve returning Around us steal,

We own some pleasing and mysterious year We long to feel, And leaving mortals in the darken'd distance

Our thoughts will room .---We dream of heaven and a calm existence, The angels' home !
