From Abbott's History of Hannibal The Morning Post DESTRUCTION OF CARTHAGE A TERRIBLE SCENE.

The Carthagenians did everything, in the pro The Carthagenians did everything, in the prose-cution of this war with the Romans, the most des-perate valor could do; but Scipio's cool, steady, and well calculated plans, made irresistible pro-press and hemmed them in at last, with narrow limits, by steadily.increasing pressure from which they found it impossible to break away. Scipio had erected a sort of mole or pier upon the strate and be its con which he had erected the water near the city, on which he had erected many large and powerful engines to assault the walls. One night a large company of Carthage-nians took their torches in their hands, not lighted, nians took their torenes in their names, not infinely together with some sort of epparatus for striking fine, and, partially, by waling and partially, by swimming, they made their way through the water of the harbor towards the machines. with terror at seeing all these flashing fires burst suddenly over the waters, and fled in dismay. agenians set the abandoned engines or The Car e, and then throwing their own useless torches nto the flames, they swam back in safety. But all this desperate bravery did very little good Scipio-quickly repaired the engines and the siege | can laborers while the capitalists have the power went on as before

But we cannot describe, in detail, all the particplars of this protracted and terrible struggle. We must passion to the closing scene, which, as related as it hays bare the folly of the protective theory: by the historians of the day, is an almost incredile series of horrors. After an immense number had been killed in the assaults which had been made upon the city, besides the thousands and thousands which had died of famine and of the exposure and hardships incident to such a seige, the army of Scipio succeeded in breaking their way through the gates. and gaining admission to the city. Some of the inhabitants were now disposed to contend no longer, but to cast themselves upon the mercy of the copy from a letter written from Lowell by a corconqueror. Others, furious in thier despair, were determined to fight to the last, not willing to give up the pleasure of killing all they could find of or the pleasure of killing all they could find of ir hated enemies, even to save their lives. They fought, therefore, from street to street, retreating gradually as the Romans advanced, till they found refuge in the citadel. One band of Scipio's soldiers nted on the tons of the houses, the roofs being flat, and fought their way there, while another column advanced in the same manner in the street The more determined of the combatants, with Hasdrubal at their head, took possession of the cir tadel, which was in a quarter of the city, situated upon an eminence and strongly fortified. Scipio lyanced to the walls of this fortification, and set the part of the city on fire which lay nearest to it. The fire burned six days, and opened a large area, which afforded the Roman troops time to act -When the troops were brought up to the area, thus left vacant by fire, and the people within saw their condition was hopeless, the desperate struggle within the walls was whether to perish in reance, or surrender in despair. There was an immense mass, not far from sixty thousand, half vomen and children, who were determined on going out to surrender themselves to Scinio's merey. drubal's wife, leading her two children by her ody of deserters from the Roman camp in the ci tadel, who had no possible hope of escaping des-truction, except by desperate resistance to the last, and these deserters, seeking refuge in a great tem-
