

ADLY BRYANT
The Spoiled Child
OR
The First and Second Returns
BY NORTHMAN

CHAPTER II

In 1812, however, which is generally termed "the late war," commenced. At this time Adly Bryant was fifteen years old. The rolling drums and the martial music, and the foot march within him, a strong desire to join the army. In 1814, shortly after the battle of Bladensburg, which the British and the Americans fought, he was recruited in the "Destruction of the Capitol," it was necessary to recruit a large number of men to be Baltimore. This called forth increased energy, and every effort was made to muster sufficient force to repel the expected attack. For this purpose recruiting offices were opened in almost every village in the neighborhood of Baltimore. An office was opened in H—, on her's native place, and without consulting either father or mother, Adly enrolled for the war. This act of the young man, however, was not the cause of his father's displeasure. When Mr. Bryant heard that his son had enlisted, he repeated without delay to the office and required the officer to erase his name from the roll. Of this, Adly took no notice, and he continued to receive his pay and to be drilled in the company in arms. One very particular friend of Adly's, named familiarly Jake Brown, was a few hours after the event, and accepted of Adly's offer to go to the office, and made Captain Q— take your name off the books!

"Did he?" responded the hopeful son, "well, he may do so, but I will tell you one thing, he will not stop me, so how he can fix it."

"But how can you help it, Ad, he has rubbed your name out?"

"How will I help it? Why will I want will the company? I will follow after, that's the way I'll help it!"

"You but what if the captain won't take you?"

"Ah! I can fix that, Jakey—can't I write out a note with the name of my father, giving me authority to re-enlist?"

"That's capital, Ad, that's the very idea. You're the boy who knows how to trick the old folks."

About two weeks after this time, the company took up their march for Baltimore. After the departure of the soldiers, Adly became quite disagreeable, and in order to please him, his father consented to his paying an uncle, who resided in Philadelphia, a visit. This arrangement suited the purpose of Adly, very much. Preparations were made and in two days after the company's departure, our hero, mounted on his father's horse, set out, as his parents supposed, for Philadelphia. On leaving H— he took a circuitous route, and by the middle of the day was in the city of Philadelphia. He had a very good horse, and he overtook them, presented himself to the captain and exhibited his note. At this time he was not satisfied, and considered it his duty to establish the young aspirant. After reading Adly's forged note, Captain Q— turned to him and said, "Why my young man, this is very strange. Your father appeared very much surprised to hear of your joining my company; now how is it possible that he has given you this note?"

"Well, you see captain," replied Adly, "I was not on good terms with my father, and he thought better to let me follow you quietly, and he gave me this note for that all I should need to be right. I reckon he wants you to keep me from teaching gun-powder, don't he?"

"Well, well," replied captain Q, "I reckon there is nothing wrong. I will meet you with Jacob Brown, but what are you going to do with that horse?"

"You'll not need him while you are in the army."

"I want to sell him."

"What will you take for him?"

"Twenty dollars."

"Doesn't the captain, and of went Mr. Bryant's family horse."

At the expiration of three weeks, Mr. Bryant began to get uneasy about his son, and wrote to the man he knew of the cause of his detention and absence. In due time his letter was answered, and Mr. Bryant was informed that Adly had not reached Philadelphia.

At this period, it was somewhat hazardous to travel from the north to Philadelphia, and in consequence of the highwheeled wagons which interested in the natural curiosity of Mr. Bryant and his friends was that Adly had fallen into the hands of these outlaws and was murdered. Dilemma was made, but no evidence could be obtained on the subject. This, however, was no argument against the correctness of the conclusion, and the bereaved parents went into mourning for their son.

Adly remained in the army for six months. He was lauded to handle cards and drink whiskey, and he became remarkably fond of both. At the end, Adly was dismissed from the army for drunkenness, and absence when drunk in his office.

CHAPTER III

I was late in the evening. The shadows were growing long and faint. The month was August, and the day had been one of August's most sultry kind. A gentle shower, perhaps the wing of a gnat, had fallen in H—. In the evening Mr. Bryant, who had been sitting on the small piazza, that they might enjoy the refreshing gales, and with their perspiration, ready, I will give a hasty, verbal painting of this cottage, or rather of the foreground. The paragon was, perhaps, one hundred yards receding from the road. In front, there was a tastefully arranged lawn. A gravel walk led from the front door of the cottage to a gate at the road. On this piazza, Mr. and Mrs. Bryant sat, as they were already stated. Darkness was fast settling around every object. Mr. Bryant cast his eye down the walk, and imagining, he saw some one approaching, turned to his wife and said in a quizzical manner, "What is that some one coming up the walk?"

"I don't know," replied Mrs. B, after peering into the mist.

"Yes, if my eyes do not deceive me, it is a man. I wonder who he can be? He walks unusually. He appears to be somewhat intoxicated, or very much excited. He is very shabby, and altogether a mean-looking personage. I wish the man were stopped by Mr. Bryant, while he surveyed the approaching stranger."

"To which his wife responded, "I am sure he is some one."

"I was secretly uttered, when the man passed, and with a grunt he rather fell down on the

"Yes sir," replied the stranger, without raising his eyes from the ground.

"Which way are you travelling, sir? It may be late as to inquire."

"I don't know, sir, I replied the stranger, in a somewhat hesitating manner, "I am engaged in going to and fro in the earth, and walking up and down in it."

"You appear to know something of scriptures, do you not?"

"Yes sir, I used to be acquainted with the bible."

"It can't be long since, for I would not take you to be very old, from your appearance."

"I was Mr. Bryant's reply, and every day he had to be acquainted with the bible."

"I may appear to be that, but I am not."

"Ah, not five and twenty?"

"No sir, I am only about eighteen."

"You appear to be very much fatigued, could you not rest?"

"I am, indeed, and I am very hungry; could you get some cold victuals?"

"Oh, certainly, we never denied a morsel of meat to any hungry man, and we will not commence with you," was Mr. Bryant's reply, and every day he had to be acquainted with the bible.

The Morning Post.
L. HARPER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
Circulation 1200 Daily.
PITTSBURGH:
MONDAY MORNING, DECEMBER 31, 1859.

Democratic State Central Committee.
The members of the Democratic State Central Committee, in their annual meeting, held at the Hotel, in Harrisburg, on Tuesday, 29th January, 1859, at 10 o'clock, a. m., for the purpose of fixing the time and place for the meeting of the next Democratic State Convention.

CLARENCE JONES, Chairman.
G. G. WARRICK, Secretary.

The Democratic Convention will meet at 11 o'clock, on Wednesday, the 1st of February, at the Hotel, in Harrisburg. It is expected that it will meet next Wednesday. They met at the New Court House.

Character of the Post.
The gentleman who, every morning, delivers the Post to the readers, will call upon them to-day or tomorrow for the complimentary remittance which is made on the Post. Mr. Rogers has gone to the expense of getting out an address for himself addressed. It was written by a gentleman who has been qualified for such a task. In addition to the address, there is a list of names of the Post, which business men will very much like to see. Also, the "Pennsylvania" is published in the Post. Mr. P. requests us to say that he means no harm by the following:

"Perhaps your pocket book is in this."

"Perhaps your note is in this."

From his knowledge of the circumstances of the case, he will not apply to them. He puts his trust upon their integrity. These who have been the benefactors of the South and the friends of the North.

The other citizens will also be advised to read the Annual Token. A more faithful and honest set of men do not live in this city. Therefore, we trust they will be well treated by our patrons.

The Unpleasant Post Office.
It is wonderful that great mistakes happen in a thing that the administration shall be disgraced by the misdeeds of his brother in law, Bezel. The mistake that has occurred in this office is the appointment of Mr. B. as assistant postmaster. The papers of this city have not once since the appointment of Mr. B. as assistant postmaster, been in the hands of the business men of this city. The papers of this city have not once since the appointment of Mr. B. as assistant postmaster, been in the hands of the business men of this city.

California is Democratic.
How gratifying must this announcement be to every true-hearted American. The recent victory throughout California, resulted in the overwhelming triumph of the Democratic party. The federal which located there undertook to "eat a march" upon the Democrats; but it was of no avail. The wise and liberal policy of the Democratic party gave to the United States an empire on the Pacific, rich in soil and valuable in mineral wealth. It was right that the people, at their first election, should choose Democrats to fill the various offices in the country.

Mr. F. H. Burnett, (dem.) has been chosen first Governor of the State of California, over John A. Sutter, (whig.) John McDougal, has been elected Lieutenant Governor.

Rodman M. Price and George W. Wright, Democrats, have been elected to Congress, and Democrats have carried their Senatorial and Representative tickets.

The Constitution, (which is one of the best in the world) had been adopted almost unanimously. The State of California is a free, fertile, and beautiful country, and it is a matter of course that the people of California, who are so numerous, should be in favor of the Democratic party.

Jefferson County.
We like the spirit of the Democracy of Jefferson County. To see a common phrase, there is no occasion in such Democracy as they proclaim. Upon the subject of the tariff, they are right. On the next question, they take the ground that the people of this county must be protected from the tariff. They desire to sustain Labor in its efforts to cope with Capital. This is the only paper money banking system in a "rigid" violation of natural rights is not despised by sensible men. Public opinion, we think, is now ripe for the abolition of the system. In our intercourse with honest and intelligent Whigs, we observe that they regard it with awe.

Our views of banking are very simple. Without laws, all men would be allowed to speculate, and their credit, but the law making power, determined to protect society, quieted such wild notions that men shall not loan their credit and receive interest upon it. But, a few capitalists apply for, and obtain, charters, which entitle them to the right of loaning their credit. Thus, a few, who are rich, possess the power to oppress the many. It is not right to receive interest upon what they owe, while the masses are deprived of the same privilege. Will any man stand up and say that this is just? We think not.

Look at the train of evils which follow the creation of Banks: There are "expansions and contractions" of credit, which result in the ruin of the honest and the ruin of the dishonest. The honest are enabled to trade on the credit of the dishonest and the dishonest are enabled to trade on the credit of the honest. The honest are enabled to trade on the credit of the dishonest and the dishonest are enabled to trade on the credit of the honest.

DEATH OF THE DOWAGER QUEEN.
The political influence of the Dowager Queen is scarcely worth mentioning.

It is said that parliament will convene in January, in order to expedite business. The question of a reduction of the national debt, presents a new aspect.

The resignation of the prime minister of England is said to be the result of the failure of the Conservative Government to carry out its policy. It is supposed that the Conservative Government will be replaced by a Liberal Government.

The Dowager Queen, who died on the 13th inst., was the widow of King George III. She was born in 1727, and lived to the age of 82 years.

The Dowager Queen was a very pious and virtuous woman. She was the mother of King George IV, and the grandmother of King William IV.

The Dowager Queen was buried in the Royal Chapel of St. George, in Windsor. Her funeral was attended by a large number of nobles and gentlemen.

DEATH OF THE DOWAGER QUEEN.
The political influence of the Dowager Queen is scarcely worth mentioning.

It is said that parliament will convene in January, in order to expedite business. The question of a reduction of the national debt, presents a new aspect.

The resignation of the prime minister of England is said to be the result of the failure of the Conservative Government to carry out its policy. It is supposed that the Conservative Government will be replaced by a Liberal Government.

The Dowager Queen, who died on the 13th inst., was the widow of King George III. She was born in 1727, and lived to the age of 82 years.

The Dowager Queen was a very pious and virtuous woman. She was the mother of King George IV, and the grandmother of King William IV.

The Dowager Queen was buried in the Royal Chapel of St. George, in Windsor. Her funeral was attended by a large number of nobles and gentlemen.
