r day with one of my neighbors upon this subject, he mentioned an incident which occurred last summer which should bring the blush to the face of every negro sportsman, if negroes are capable of blushing. A pair of red birds had built a nest on a tree not far from his house, and the male whistled daily in sweetest strains the story of his love to his listening mate. The whole family of MONY, or the Science of Love, Selection, Courtship, and Married Life. Ye who would enjoy matrimonial felicity, and avoid my friend were made happy with their red birds, and they could talk of nothing else. But their pleasure was destined to end in pain. One afternoon a negro, with a double barreled fowlingpiece, crossed the fence, passed over the field, and piece, crossed the lence, passed over the held, and appraached the house. He stopped—the unfor-tunate red bird's song had caught his ear. Cau-tiously creeping along, he got near the tree, raised his gun and fired, and the poor bird fell dead at
