and yet have to pay the sub-contractor, though the builder could have no claim upon him. He might contract for a house at $1000 and find liens established against it for $2000. If such were the case no prudent man would make a contract to have a house erected, except with a builder who had ample means to secure him against liens and such men only could ob-tain the most desirable contracts. The allowance of any lien at all to a sub-contractor is a special privilege, granted only in case of buildings, and it is not unreasonable to require him to look to the principal contract, to ascertain whether it is such as to justify him in becoming a contractor under it. The argument that the law and the principal contract make the builder the agent of the owner, proves nothing. Suppose the fact to be so: still his agency is only special, limited by the terms of the contract. He is to employ men to build the house in the manner and on the terms there indi-cated. For anything beyond that he exceeds his authority, and does not bind his principal. If, under a contract to build a brick idwelling bouse, he erects a wooden stable, I do not see how he or his sub-contractor case lien. under a contract to build a brick dwelling bouse, he erects a wooden stable, I do not see how he or his sub-contractor can claim any lien. Yet the latter could do so, if the sub-contract were not dependent on the principal one.
