The art of making an Artificial Digestives Fluid, and of performing the process of Digestion, out of the Stomach, has long been known to Physiological Chemists. The honor of the discovery belongs to a celebrated German Chemist, who gave the name of Pepsin to the active principle of the Gastric Juice, which he obtained by macgrating the lining membrane of the Digestive Stomach of the Calf in water, and precipitating the Pepsin from the solution. Dr. Frout, Dr. Pereira, and Dr. Gregory, in England, Dr. Beaumont and Dr. Dunglison, in America, and chief of all, Baron Lieus, have recenily experimented, and written upon this singularly interesting and curious subject, and thrown much light upon the nature of the Digestive process, in its chemical and physiological relations.

In regard to the first charge we have only to say that we have never before heard of the occurrence of any such case in Pittsburgh. Baker vs. the Owners of the Steamboat ID-Odd Fellows' Hall, Odeon Building, Fourth treet, between Wood and Smithfield streets.—Plusburgh incompment, No. 2, meets 1st and 3d Tuesdays of each Hibernia No. 2.

Harbor regulations and customs, instituted for the order and convenience of moored vessels, are matters with which passing vessels have nothing to do; and therefore a passing vessel cannot object that any fault, as against her, is committed by another vessel seeking a moorage in an improper position in the harbor.

A steamboat, attempting to effect a moorage, is not liable for the accident of a coal boat running against her and sinking, even if she occupies a point, close by which coal boats necessarily pass; unless she be unreasonably tardy in getting into her position, or unless she could, with ordinary care, have got out of the way of the coal boat; and she is not liable then. If the coal boat, with ordinary care and skill, could have avoided the accident.

Accidents in navigation, occasioned by recent and unknown obstructions, are regarded as inevitable.

The usual right of steamboats, as against other vessels, as to the mode of mooring or running, are not affected by the fact that, a few days before, an obstruction had been occasioned in another part of the river, which Hibernia No. 2. this process.

A castom among pilots of a particular class, founded on no secessity of the navigation peculiar to their sort of craft, to take a particular route, gives them no exclusive right to that route, and does not alter the rights of others in reference thereto.

A custom among such pilots to take a route that is dangerous to themselves or others, when there is no necessity for it, is bad, and ought to be abandoned.

When a steamboat is guilty of unreasonable delay and occupies an unreasonable portion of the channel of the river in attempting to moor, and by reason thereof a coal boat, or other unmanageable vessel, runs against her and is lost, though exerting ordinary care and skill to avoid the accident, the steamboat is liable. The plaintiff's witnesses say that they did all lutely nutrue that insult was offered to Jenny Lind.

The windows of her dressing room were boarded up, and it was therefore impossible for stones to be thrown into it, even supposing that there were per sons malicious enough to do such an act. It is true that she retired from the building through the back yard, but this was done, not from fears of any per sonst injury, but to avoid the necessity of pushing her way to her carriage through the immense crowd of people in front of the Hall. There was an intense desire amongst the "outsiders" to see Jenny or wings upon her body like other angels! All this was certainly very complimentary, although no doubt it was a little annoying to a lady whose whole history shows that she wishes to avoid the public gaze. In a few weeks the Masonic Hall will be entirely completed, and we are assured that it will they could to escape it, yet many others passed it safely afterwards. FECKER'S FARINA, recommended by Aledical stable currency.

All other circumstances being equal, I agree with the Senator from Kehtucky that that country is most prosperous where labor commands the highest warges. I do not, however, mean by the terms "high est wages," the greatest nominal amount. Daring the Revolutionary war, one day's work commanded a hundred dollars of continental paper; but this twould scarcely have purchased a breakfast. The more proper expression would be, to say that that of more proper expression would be, to say that that the greatest romand amount of a description of the greatest nominal amount of a description of the proper expression would be, to say that that of navigation, by the general law of the river, and the greatest reward; where one day's labor will procure not the greatest nominal amount of a description of the proper captures and comforts of life.
