She, poor wo-man, immediately took out his well-saved suit and occupied herself in repairing, as best she might, the cruel ravages of time; as well as in migh, the starching and ironing an already snows shirt to the highest degree of perfection.

Next day, in due time, he arrived at General Vernon's handsome temporary dwelling, and re-ceived a cordial welcome. A dozen guesta, civilans as well as soldiers sat down to a splendid banquet. After dinner, the conversation happen ed to turn on the recent improvements in arts ed to turn on the recent improvements in and and manufactures; and comparisons were drawn between the relative talent for invention displayed by artists of different countries. Watch king happened to be mentioned as one of the fully improved, the host desired his valet to fetch a most beautiful little watch, a perfect chef-d' couvre of workmanship, which he had lately pur-chased in Paris; and which was less valuable for its richly jeweled case, than for the exquisiection of the mechanism it enshring trinket passed from hand to hand, and was great ly admired by the guests; then the conversation turned on other topics, and many subjects were discussed, until they adjourned to the drawing-After sitting there a while the general suddenired him to take it from the dining-room to ble, where it had been left, and restore it to its proper place. In a few minutes the servant re-turned, looking somewhat frightened; he could not find the watch. General Vernon, surprise went himself, but was not more fortun Perhaps, sir, you or one of the company may have carried it by mistake into the drawing "I think not: but we will try." Another search, in which all the guests joined "What I fear," said the general. "i that some one by chance may tread upon and General Vernon was a widower, and this costly is found!" exclaimed one of the gentlemen with minous emphasis. "That decision," said a young man, who was This suggestion was received with laughter and acclamations; and the youg man presenting himself as the first victim, was searched by the valet, who, for the once, enacted the part of a custom-house officer. The general, who at first opposed this piece of practical pleasantry, ended by laughing at it; and each new inspection of pockets produced fresh bursts of mirth. Captain Dutton alone took no share in what was going on; his hand trembled, his brow darkene he stood as much apart as possible. At length his turn came; the other guests had all display ed the contents of their pockets, so with one ac cord, and amid renewed laughter, they surron ded him, exclaiming he must be the guilty one, as he was the last. The captain, pale and agi-tated, muttered some excuses, unheard amid the uproar. "Now for it, Johnson!" cried one to the "Johnson, we're watching you!" said another; 'produce the culprit."
The servant advanced; but Dutton crossing his arms on his breast, declared in an agitated voice, that, except by violence, no one should lay a hand on him. A very awkward silence ensued, which the general broke by saying: "Cap tain Dutton is right; this child's play has lasted long enough. I claim exemption for him and for Dutton, trembling and unable to speak, thanked his kind host by a grateful look, and then took an early opportunity of withdrawing; Gen-eral Vernor did not make the slighest remark on his departure, and the remaining guests, through politeness, imitated his reserve; but the mirth of the evening was gone, every face looked anxious, and the host himself looked grave and Captain Dutton spent some time in wandering restlessly on the sands before he returned home. It was late when he entered the cottage, and his wife could not repress an exclamation of affright when she saw his pale and troubled "What has happened?" cried she. "Nothing," replied her husband, throwing himself on a chair and laying a small packet or the table. "You have cost me very dear," he said, addressing it. In vain did his wife try to soothe him, and obtain an explanation. "Not now. Jane." be said : "to-morrow we shall see Early next morning he went to General Ver-non's house. Although he walked resolutely, his mind was sadly troubled. How could he present himself? In what way would he be received? How could he speak to the general without risking the reception of some look ral without risking the reception of some or word which he could never pardon? The very neeting with Johnson was to be dreaded.

He knocked, another servant opened the door and immediately gave him admission. "This man, at all events," he thought, "knows nothing of what has passed." Will the general receive him? Yes, he is ushured into his dressing-room. Without during to raise his eyes, the poor man began to speak in a low hurried voice. "General Vernon, you thought my conduct strange last night; and painful and humiliating as the explanation will be, I feel it due to you and to myself to make it— His auditor tried to speak but Dutton went on without heeding the interruption. "My misery is at its height; that is my only excuse. My wife and our four little ones are "My friend!" cried the general with emotion. But Dutton proceeded.
"I cannot describe my feelings yesterday while seated at your luxurious table. I thought of my poor Jane, deprived herself of a morsel of bread to give it to her baby; of my little pale thin Annie, whose delicate appetite rejects the coarse food which is all we can give her; and in an evil hour I transferred two pates from my plate to my pocket, thinking they would tempt my lit-tle darling to eat. I should have died of shame had these things been produced from my pocket, and your guests and servant made witnesses of my cruel poverty. Now, general you know all; and but for the fear of being suspected by you of a crime, my distress should never have been "A life of unblemished honor," replied his
