This continues to be an engrossing topic in almost every circle throughout the country ; and we may justly conclude that it will soon become among the constantly occurring realities of indoor and out-door life. Although public sentiment would seem to have almost universally admitted the nestness and modest appearance of the new dress-and none can deny its entire fitness, as well to distinguish the sexes as to enable females to practice locomotion more gracefullyyet there are those who still hang on to the old "draggle-tail," if for no other reason, perhaps, because they wish to impose as many burthens on women as possible. There are few, however, among the editors of newspapers, who do not advocate the proposed reform. One of the latest cases of this kind that has come under our observation, however, is that of a New York editor, who virtually excuses a band of ruffians for having pursued and grossly insulted a lady and gentleman, who were walking near the Bowery. After stating the fact, he says that five or six police officers arrested three of the crowd for disorly conduct. He then adds:--"This circumstance ought to caution young women against rendering themselves more conspicuous on the streets,
