BY MRS. CAROLINE ORNE. [CONCLUDED.]

The path was narrow and in some places tangled, which obliged her to proceed at a slow pace. As the day declined, she began to think of some shelter for the night, and felt many apprehensions lest she should be obliged to spend it in the open air, or what was worse, fall upon some tory behits the whose invaries might instead be habitation whose inmates might mistrust her nabitation whose inmaces might mistrust her errand, and prevent her from pursuing her jour-ney. Suddenly she came upon a broad eart way which crossed a narrow and obstructed path. -She drew up her horse, hesitated a few moments and then permitted him to take his own course. Vithout hesitation he struck into the more open way, and in half an hour, glimpses of a plante tion could be discerned through the trees. Un certain whether she had better seek the hospital ity of the owner or endeavor to search out some more obscure another, and proceeded more slowly. Her irresolution was only momentary, for turning her eyes towards the western horizon, she perceived that the mass of gold and purple clouds, which a short time before had hovered over the atting sun, were already parting with their

A few moments more, and she was at the door of the mansion, where a lady, who had been watching her approach, stood ready to welcome her. The lady conducted her to a well-furnish ed apartment, who, though with delicacy she abstained from asking her any questions, inform-ed her in the course of conversation that her ame was Therwits, and that her son who owned the plantation, was at present serving as a subltran under Gen. Sumpter. Emily being satisfied relative to the political ents of her hostess, ventured to disclose the object of her journey, which, though it awa-kened fears for her safety, elicited the warmest robation upper was speedily served, and then mindful her a chamber, where, in a bed furnished with snow-white drapery, she was soon enjoying the luxury of sound and quiet repose.

The carol of the lark, soaring upward until it became a speck in the blue ether, was Emily's music, and she set forward on her journey at the first faint blush of dawn. As during the day ding, she occasionally met a solitary trave preceding, she occasionally het solutely are the ler, who, though he might wonder within himself that a young and beautiful female should be riding unprotected, at a time when the country was ing unprotected, at a time when the country was infested with men who knew no laws save what right," contented himself with noticing her with a bow, or a few civil words of salutation.

The morning was nearly past, and the hear began to be so oppressive that she determined to seek rest and shelter in a house situated no great distance in the midst of some forest trees, which hrew over it their cool and grateful shade. She had just come to this conclusion, when she saw the gleam of some red coats through the copse that skirted the wayside. Her first impulse was o fly, but a moment's reflection told her that the attempt must not only prove useless, but be the means of exciting suspicion. In a few minutes, means of exciting suspicion. In a few minute one of the number, whom by his dress she judg ed to be an officer, was at her aide. It was with fficulty that she so nerved herself as to keep the hand which held the reins from shaking, for she was aware that she had fallen into the hands of some of Lord Rawdon's scouts, Mrs. Therwits on the alert in that vicinity.

The officer addressed her with much politeness: saying that as she came in the direction from Here she was locked into an apartment which probably had been before used as a prison room, for it was so guarded as to preclude the possibility escape. In a few minutes she heard the voice of a man,

The article is headed as is this article; but its bearings affect not only the Bride, but Woman, in the circumstances of her proximity to him ren-tion. The object of the learned writer is to on the left;"-which he combats thus:--"This it is to extend it in the rectitude of its own di-rection. This, too, is scenically better. He world ruled by such stern Republicans as Kos-our state, promote and make productive our in ing." Then again he says-"The right hand is auspicious as the place of honor, of promotion, of conspiculty, and of delight." And 'The right hand, with eastern nations, was the place of good omens, and the symbol of prosperity;" and to conclude this class of objections the writer refers us to the Scriptures, where the Church is spoken of as the Bride, who is King, &c. We like to do things as the learned D. D. says -" Decently and in order;" and in this case, pursuing the natural bent of our minds, we must say that Dr. Cox's assertion, that the first pothis objection to the left side.

As it respects the right hand being the post of honor,-the learned Dr. should have recollected, or should have learned, that in a military point of view, (and the origin of Chivalry was military) the left also is a post of honor, and in some cases the highest! The right hand, too, was "the place of good omens?" Does Dr. Cox believe in the doctrine involved in this declaration? which she thought sounded like that of the officer, saying something in the adjoining apart to make it—but not otherwise. The reference ment, in an under tone, which was replied to by a female voice in the same, subdued manner. Suspecting that the conversation alluded to here upon the right hand of her lord, is perfectly self, she placed herself in a listening attitude correct in the allegorical sense; but we are not against the thin partition. Having finished her search, the woman, as she had been instructed, asked her a few questions, which failed to elicit anything of a suspicious nature. The officer who held her in custody was then admitted, and after questioning her with the like ill success, he suffered her to depart.

Judge said-Officers, preserve silence! It is a strange think that people cannot stop making such a noise. We have decided, he added, I know not how many causes without hearing We have a proverb at Angers which says, " A cabbage soup is worth five pence to the doctor."
It comes from the times when they gave the doctor only five pence for a visit. Wilson Fontane, a revolutionary soldier under General Marion, died on the 16th of last month at the residence of Mr. James Knoblock, in Florida. He was 105 years of age, and retained sufficient strength for out door labor until about three days before his death.

Road Rotice.—In pursuance of the petition of aundry citizens of Pitt township forthe Court to appoint viewers for a public road leading from the Monongahela river at or near Fawcett & Anderson's saw oneshels river at or near Fawcett & Anderson's saw mill, to a point on the Greensburgh turnpike road, near James Carney's tavern, in said township, viewers were appointed and have made report in favor of, and located said road, which report is filed in the office of the Clerk of the Court of Quarter Sessions for confirmation.

[From the Louisville Journal; May 29th, 1851.]

Dr. J. S. Houghton's Pepsin, for Dyspepsia, Pepared from Rennet, or the Stomath of the Oz.
[T] On the 7th of May, 1851, Rev. M. D. Williams, Pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, in Louisville, Kentacky, was and had been for a long time confined to his room, and most of the time to his bed, with Dyspersia and Chronic Diarrhea, and was, to all appearance, on the very verge of the grave, and acknowledged to be so by his physician, who had tried all the ordinary means in his power, without effect, and at the above named time, the patient, with the consent of his physician, commesced the use of Dr. Houghton's "PEPSIN," and to the astonishment, surprise and delight, of all, he was much relieved the first day. The third day he deft his room. The sixth day, which was excessively hot, he rode ten miles with no bad effect; on the eighth day he went on a visit to the country; and, on the thirteenth day hough not entirely restored to his natural strength, he was so far recovered as to go alone a journey of live hundred miles, where he arrived in safety, much improved in health, having had no disturbance of the stomach or bowels, ofter taking the first dose of Pepsin. These facts are not controvertible, and that this is a case which ought to convince all skeptiles that there is a power in EPSIN." Let physiclans and dyspopicisinvestigate.
