Whatever may be thought of the Bloomer costume, there is one evil, at least, which it remedies:—we mean the inconvenience of a long nkirt, sweeping the ground in wet weather, and thus wetting the ankles. More females, perhaps, catch cold in this, than in any other way. Besides, nothing is more unsightly than a wet, soiled and draggled skirt of this description. We Bloomer costume indelicate, admit, nevertheless, Bloomer costume indelicate, admit, nevertheless, its superiority for wet weather over the present fashion. She proposed, however, to reform the dress of her sex, not by shortening the skirts, but by introducing a light-made Wellington boot, something like the patent leather ones worn by gentlemen in evening costume. Such a boot would be water-tight for the foot, and would preserve the ankle from being wetted by the skirt. A very little practice, our fair friend, said, would accustom a lady to this sort of a boot; while thousands of lives would be preserved in conse-quence of the reform. The popular notion among females that a boot of this description must be females that a boot of this description must be necessarily clumsy, is entirely wrong. Boots, somewhat similar, are worn by the ladies of sevoral foreign countries, and have, in many cases, quite a picturesque effect. It would be a posi-tive reform, and not a mere whimsical change, if ladies would abolish the train, and, in wintry or rainy weather, wear a light, coquettish boot, a la Wellingion.—Phil. Bulletin.
