THE AMERICAN INDIANS

In witnessing the performances of the Indian eremonies, by Maungwudaus and his companions, on Thursday evening last, there were many thoughts suggested, of a peculiarly happy and ennobling character. We are led to believe, from our School Books, and from the writings of some of those who have devoted much time to the study of their manners and customs, that the Indiana believe in a Great Spirit who watches over, and guides and directs them; and who, though unseen, sees all; but there is in general very little said beyond this. Maung-WUDAUS told his hearers that this was true; and that, however superstitions some might re gard such a belief, they also believed (and be could not entirely resist it.) that we were continually surrounded by spirits-some good and some evil-who were constantly striving to obtain the mastery over us; and that, accordingly as we gave way to the promptings of the one or the other class of beings, were our actions good or evil: that these real beings, because unseen, could operate upon us only through the agency of our will: and that, consequently, the Indians, on all important occasions, cave thanks to the Great Spirit; and regarded the good spirits as his ministers or agents, by whom he performed all his wonderful works; and that it was our duty to invoke them, in order that we might enjoy good from Him. He said that when an Indian died, the body was carefully painted, and | ing to Major Merrill, of the United States Draall his ornaments, his bow, his arrows, his pipe goons, by whom he was ridden in the Florida and all his warlike weapons were buried with and Mexican wars, having participated in all the him; because the spirits of the departed would battles and been twice wounded. be there; and that, as the real warrior could not now be seen, all that belonged to him should be placed in his grave, in order that he might be not be mistaken.

It is not our purpose to assert or to deny this doctrine, but we will say, because we feel it, that some of the most beautiful and sublime thoughts flow from such a belief; and some of verely. the most happifying results, we think, must inevitably follow its general acceptance. What belief can be more inspiring, than that which Green as a suitable candidate for the Presidenrecognizes the soul as the real being, whose qualities and attributes are estimated only by will be gratefully appreciated by his numerous uses; and whose condition in the future state is friends in this State. the result of its loves while in the state of tranmition? Capture of a Big Bear.

On Monday of last week a party of hunters captured a bear on the Allegheny mountain, in the neighborhood of Plane 8, which might really be termed a monarch of the woods. He weighed, after his entrails were taken out, 305 pounds!

In good sooth he was a formidable looking customer, and just such a one as we should prefer seeing strung up in a wood shed, rather than meet him in the woods alone and unarmed. The hunters were on his track for several days, and when they sinally overtook him, it took three crack rife shots to make him "bite the dust."

His carcass was brought to town and sold to Messrs. Otto & Herrick, who in their turn disposed of about half of it in small parcels to the public, and the balance of it will be served up in documents of the course of the Court of London, "Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London," Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London, "Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London," Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London," Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London," Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London, "Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London," Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London, "Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London," Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London, "Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London, "Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London, "Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London, "Rose Foster," and "Caroline of the Court of London, "Rose Foster," and "Caroline of Brunating, Eng.

It is bound to my heart by the holiestics;
And J prize, oh! how fondly, its worth—
Tis not beauty hor splendor, endears it to me,
Ohne! for its grandeur hath flows
But 'lis fondest affection that highes me to thee—
My old house—my dear happy home!

Oh! home—What dear magic is in that sweet soun How closely it speaks to the heart; What a world of deep tenderness in thee is found; Oh! who from such treasure could part? Could barter the joys of a sweet home of love, For a path in a strange world unknown; Could seek for vain pleasures and heartlessly rove, If they knew the real value of home?

Some sigh to be wealthy, some seek to be great, Some envy what others can do; But oh! I'm content in my lowly estate, For the hearts all around me are true; And ties that are hearest and dearest to me, house-my dear happy home
