Let the Baltimore Platform be reiterated and patriotic gentlemen think it is a pity that Kossurn had not understood the terms of the resolution, in virtue of which he came to our country; or that some one had not properly explained it to him. They would have been better satisfied, probably, if Congress, after authorizing the President to send a vessel of the United States for him and his companions in exile, had also declared that, as a portion of the people of this country were fearful of giving offence to Russia and Austria, the President, through some of the petty aristocrats of the Navy, or other of ficials, should subject the exiles to degrading There can be no doubt, in the mind of any well-meaning man, possessed of common sense, in relation to the terms of the invitation to Kos-surn and his compatriots to visit our country. The preamble to the resolution recites that "the People of the United States sincerely sympathize with the Hungarian exiles, Kossuth and his associates, and fully appreciate the magnanimous conduct of the Turkish Government in receiving and treating these noble exiles with kindness and hospitality; " and that "it is the wish of the Sultan to permit them to leave his dominions." In consequence of this sympathy on the part of the People of the United States, "the President of the United States was requested to authorize the employment of some one of the public vessels which may be now cruizing in the Mediterranean, to receive and carry to the United States the said Louis Lossuth and his associates in capfivity." This is the plain unequivocal language of the preamble and resolution, that was passed by both and the head of the horse, and it is safe to say that the horse will divide the admiration of the Houses of Congress, in virtue of which the President ordered the steamship Mississippi to be public, with his rider.
