spent most of his life in the held of mars, shew very little about the camp of Cupid. He was one of those rough and honest spirits often met with in his gallant profession, innocent as an infant of almost every thing save high integrity and indomitable bravery. He was nearly fifty years old, and his toils were aver, when Master Dan Cupid brought him acquainted with a wid-ow Wadman, in whose eye he began to detect nted with a widome thing that made him uneasy. ... Here was the result of leisure.

During his service, he had never seen any thing werthy of notice in a woman's eye. In fact, he would acarcely have noticed whether a woman had three eyes in her head or only one for, no matter where his own eyes were, his thoughts were only among "guns, and drums, and wounds," and love was a thing that lived in his memory, just as he remembered once reading a visionary story book, called the Arareading a visionary story book, called the 'Arabian nights' Entertainment,' when a boy.

Well, then General had settled down into an amiable, gentlemanly old fellow, living alone with comfortable wealth around him, and having with comfortable wealth around him, and having little to do, save now and then entertain an old comrade in arms, which companionship afforded an apportunity for him "to fight his battles o'er again." But alas! o'er this calm evening of the old General's day, a deal of perplexity was a doomed to fall, and he soon found himself the troubled waters, the Jepth of which he could by no n ea s un lerstand. He floundered about like a caged rat under a pump—and such another melancholy fish out of water never before swal-lowed the bait, book and all, of the angling good of love. The poor General. We must give him a name or we can't tell the story, and the best name for such a story is Uncle Toby. Poor General Uncle Toby debated abstractedly about his new position, and never had slege or campaign given to him such perplexity before.

At length, however, the blunt honesty of his disposition rose uppermost among the conflicting once studied "Othello's defence" to recite at an exhibition, but made a great failure; and he now recollected there was something in this very much like what he wanted to say. He got the book immediately, found the passage, clapped on his lat with a determined air, and passed off to the willow Wadman's, with Shakspeare under his arm. ""Madam," said General Uncle Toby, opening his book at the marked place, with the solemnity

General?"
"You!" said Uncle Toby, flourishing his sword arm in the air, and assuming a military attitude of defiance, as if he expected an assault from the widow immediately.

Will you kill me if I marry you?" said the widow with a merry twinkle of the eye.
"No madam!" replied Undo Toby, in a most serious and deprecating tone, as if to assure her that such anides had never entered his head.

"Well, then, I guess I'll marry you," said Thank you, ma'am," said Uncle Toby; "but one thing I'm bound to tell you of, madam-The widow started, remained silent a moment,
